Lawyer Planning Insanity Defense

Jersey May Get Captive for First Trial as Kidnap Slayer.

New York, Sept. 28 (U.P.).—Discovery of a broken and sharpened soup spoon, concealed in Bruno Hauptmann's cell, today indicated that the man charged with extortion of $50,000 in ransom from Charles A. Lindbergh either planned to commit suicide or attempt a jail break.

The spoon disappeared after one of the German prisoner's meals, and when jailers searched his solid steel cell today they found it, broken in four pieces and concealed in a drain pipe, which was taken apart by a plumber. The bowl end had been sharpened and the handle twisted.

Jail officials, as well as District Attorney Samuel J. Foley, would not discuss the discovery, but extraordinary precautions were taken at once. Hereafter paper utensils will be employed in serving meals to the prisoner, and the guard at his cell door has been strengthened.

Captive's Gloom Deepens.

Jailers told reporters that Hauptmann, a brooding type, has exhibited even more pronounced signs of dejection in the last 24 hours. They frankly said the prisoner appears to be in a mood for self-destruction.

The spoon was found while a steady stream of witnesses flowed through the district attorney's office for questioning in a multitude of phases of the case. The confusion at the Bronx County building was, if anything, greater today than at any time since Hauptmann was taken from lower Manhattan to the Bronx.

At the same time, Department of Justice agents, New York detectives and New Jersey officials were coordinating their efforts in a swift drive to bring in every shred of evidence possible. It was virtually a certainty that the New York authorities will yield the prisoner to New Jersey for trial on a charge of murdering the son of the world-famous airman.

Jersey Given First Chance.

"If New Jersey wants Hauptmann," said District Attorney Foley, "we shall give him up at once, before we place him on trial on the extortion charge here."

Reports persisted throughout the day in the corridors of the big white building that the investigation is concentrating on a search for possible accomplices. There was much talk about a stoop-shouldered man being sought.

First indication that James W. Fawcett, attorney for Hauptmann, may begin building an insanity defense came when the lawyer announced a psychiatrist would examine the prisoner, probably to-

Tractor Begins Antarctic Trek

Spring Explorations Are Started by Byrd's Expedition.

Little America, Antarctica, Sept. 28 (via Mackay Radio.) (A.P.).—The spring exploration offensive of the second Byrd Antarctic expedition was opened this morning with the departure of tractor No. 1 for the Edsel Ford Range, 240 miles East of Little America.

The tractor pulled out with the temperature at 30 degrees below zero and dropping. The sky was cloudless and the sun burned hazily through the smoky mist banked above the Ross Sea.

Close to 8,500 pounds was loaded aboard the tractor and upon the two triple-runnered sledges trailing behind.

Beyond Retreat Camp the party was to swing East and lay a great circle course for the mountains. The trip was approved by Admiral Byrd for the triple purpose of selecting and marking a landing field and gasoline-fueling base for airplanes at the foot of the range, advancing dogs and men and food for the base of Paul Siple's sledging party which will make an extended exploration of the range, and to mark the outward trail at 25-mile intervals with special orange panels to serve as guides.

If successful the journey will be the longest tractor trip undertaken in the Antarctic. Harold I. June, in command of the party, expected to complete the operation and return in eight days.

Train Crash Injures 8.

Chicago, Sept. 28 (A.P.).—Eight persons were slightly injured and several hundred shaken up when a rapid transit train crashed into the rear of an Aurora and Elgin electric train, stopped for a railroad crossing.

Cardinals Tie Giants In Race for Pennant

Dizzy Dean Scores 29th Victory, Shutting Out Reds, 4 to 0.

St. Louis, Sept. 28 (U.P.).—The St. Louis Cardinals today climaxed one of baseball's most brilliant late-season surges by deadlocking the New York Giants for the National League lead, with only two days remaining in the pennant campaign.

	Won.	Lost.	Pct.
St. Louis	93	58	.616
New York	93	58	.616

The Cardinals beat Cincinnati, 4 to 0, for their second straight victory over the Reds in their final four-game series. It was the Cards' eighteenth triumph in their last 23 games.

Today is the first time since June 6 that Frankie Frisch's Cardinals went up to the top ranking. They were on top from May 28 to June 6, their only period of leadership.

Each club now has two games remaining on its schedule. The Cards will finish their series with the Reds, and the Giants tackle Brooklyn in two "grudge" games.

Should each team take both its games, they will wind up with a deadlock in the final standing, with this:

	Won.	Lost.	Pct.
New York	95	58	.621
St. Louis	95	58	.621

League Leaves Peace in Chaco To Americas

U. S. Declines Official Cooperation but Will Aid Settlement.

Geneva, Sept. 28 (A.P.).—The Monroe Doctrine appeared on the international stage at Geneva tonight when the League of Nations Chaco conciliation committee decided that attempts to settle the war between Bolivia and Paraguay must be entrusted to nations of the Americas.

The United States, it was officially disclosed, feels it will be unable to participate in efforts to settle the war as a member of the league committee. Washington made it known, however, that it would be guided by a spirit of friendly cooperation, although acting independently, and would support any plan of settlement leading to a peaceful conclusion of the conflict.

Senor Bedoya, Paraguayan representative, said in an interview that Paraguay wants the United States included in the American nations, which, in the opinion of Paraguay, should be delegated exclusively to settle the conflict.

Stephan Osusky, of Czechoslovakia, was elected president of the conciliation committee, which instructed him and Joseph A. C. Avenol, secretary general of the league, to collect all necessary information for a report to the general committee. This report will be used as the basis for recommendations.

Nine Nations on Committee.

A subcommittee of nine Latin-Americans nations will proceed to work immediately and will choose its own president at its first session tomorrow. The recommendations to the general committee may be adopted if the subcommittee's efforts fail.

The American refusal to accept membership on the Chaco committee caused disappointment here, especially in view of the committee's decision to allow its American members to attempt a conciliation and thus, as one prominent South American said, support the Monroe Doctrine.

Americans here interpreted Washington's decision as a disinclination to participate officially in an action of the league which is definitely based upon the league covenant, to which the United States has not subscribed.

Dublin News Strike Ends.

Dublin, Sept. 28 (A.P.).—After more than nine weeks without newspapers, Dublin residents heard today that striking printers have agreed to settle their differences with publishers and go back to work Monday. The strike was officially called off tonight.

First Officer to Enter Berlin; Was Active in Business.

Maj. Gen. George Herbert Harries, 74, war-time commander of Brest and for 17 years commanding officer of the District National Guard, died last night at Waverly on Rockville pike. He had been ill of pneumonia for three weeks. Gen. Harries was the first American officer to enter Berlin after the World War.

Born in Haverfordwest, South Wales, he came to Canada at the age of 20, and two years later to Washington, where he obtained a post with the Government Printing Office, only to be displaced by President Cleveland because he was a Republican. He began a journalistic carrer on The Washington Post and later became an editorial writer on the Evening Star.

He became president of the old Metropolitan Railroad Co., the Ninth and F streets lines in 1895, and in 1900 a vice president of the Washington Railway & Electric Co., and of all companies in that combination, serving until 1811.

Gen. Harries was vice president of the Washington Board of Education from 1895 to 1903 and president of the Washington Board of Trade in 1910 and 1911.

In 1912 he became a vice president of H. M. Byllesby & Co., of Chicago, with which he was affiliated until about five years ago, when he retired. Father Sued by Son For College Funds

Omaha, Nebr., Sept. 28 (A.P.).—The question of whether a domestic relations court has authority to compel a $14,000-a-year corporation executive to send his son to college was taken under advisement today by District Judge Rhoades.

Lloyd Skinner, jr., 20, son of Lloyd Skinner, president of the Skinner Manufacturing Co., petitioned for an order directing his father to pay sufficient money for him to finish his course at Creighton University.

Archbishop Curley, 6 Charities Will Get Bulk of Shea Estate

Six Catholic institutions of Washington and Archbishop Michael J. Curley, of Baltimore, will receive a major portion of the $771,158 estate left by James F. Shea, who died September 24, it was revealed yesterday when a petition for the probate of his will was filed in the District Supreme Court.

The institutions will receive $5,000 each. They are House of the Good Shepherd, St. Ann's Infant Asylum, St. Joseph's Home and School of Washington, St. Vincent's Orphan Asylum, Little Sisters of the Poor, and St. John's College of Washington.

Archbishop Curley will receive an amount not now subject to estimation because of the conditional provisions of a large number of bequests that are to be paid before the balance of the estate goes to him, in his individual capacity. It is believed, though, that the archbishop will receive more than $400,000.

Philip A. Shea, a brother of the deceased, of Colonial Beach, Va., will receive an outright cash bequest of $130,000, and Mary J. Breen and George I. Borger were given $20,000 apiece, together with the option of succeeding to Mr. Shea's extensive real estate business gratis.

A cousin, Annie Cullinane, will be given $10,000, and a $30,000 bequest is provided for Mary Corcoran. There were a large number of minor bequests to relatives and friends, and a group of provisional bequests, some of them totaling $30,000 each.

Mr. Shea directed that after all the specific bequests were met, the entire balance of the estate was to go to the archbishop. The will named G. Percy McGlue and Mr. Borger as executors, while Attorney Thomas F. Burke represents the estate. Mr. Shea had a real estate office at 643 Louisiana avenue northwest. His estate was made up of large real estate holdings, cash and stocks and bonds.

NRA Avoids Wide Change Of Policies

Richberg Makes Pledge as Business Shows Dissatisfaction.

By Douglas Warrenfels.

Business was assured by the Administration yesterday that "sweeping changes of policy will be discouraged" in the new NRA set-up.

Donald R. Richberg, director of the recovery policy-making committee, emphasized the intention of "deliberative action" and "full discussion" shortly before President Roosevelt, in a friendly gesture to industry generally, stayed until October 15 an order reducing the cotton garment industry work week from 40 to 36 hours without any wage cuts.

Meanwhile, without waiting until all its members could reach Washington, the newly-created National Industrial Recovery Board "met" by long distance telephone and elected S. Clay Williams, Winston-Salem, N. C., tobacco manufacturer, as chairman, and Dr. Leon C. Marshall, Brookings Institution labor expert, as executive secretary.

Col. George A. Lynch, former aid of Gen. Hugh S. Johnson, resigned, was chosen by the board as NRA administrative officer.

First Meeting Tuesday.

Marshall, Sidney Hillman, second representative of labor, and Prof. Walton Hamilton, spokesman for consumers, were at their desks yesterday. Williams and the other member, A. D. Whiteside, president of Dun & Bradstreet, will arrive in time for the first meeting of the full board Tuesday.

Representatives of big business privately made known they were not entirely satisfied with the personnel of the board. Although Williams is a wealthy manufacturer and chairman of Secretary Roper's Business Avisory and Planning Council, the industrialists regarded Whiteside as the only board member likely to be aggressive in their behalf.

Nor were business men as a class optimistic over the news that future NRA policies will be recommended to President Roosevelt by a committee on which they will have no representative except Williams.

The reshaped industrial emergency committee consists of Government officials only, including Mr. Richberg, as director; Secretary Ickes, Secretary Perkins, Farm Administrator Chester Davis, Relief Administrator Harry L. Hopkins, and Williams, representing the administrative board.

Turns to Third Division.

With the legislative and executive branches already named, the President shifted his attention to possible formation of a third grand division to handle NRA judiciary issues. He said plans for the legal set-up remained indefinite, but would involve three general functions—code enforcement, labor settlements and code fair practice provision settlements. He explained labor questions already were under supervision of the various labor relations boards.

After Richberg, at a press conference, gave his assurance that there would be no sweeping changes of personnel, as well as policy, he was asked whether Miss Frances Robinson, key figure in NRA as secretary to Johnson, would be retained.

"I'd rather not pass on individual cases," he responded.

Miss Robinson, however, is expected to resign.

Richberg clarified his attitude on the antitrust laws.

"I think there has been a great deal of misunderstanding," he said,

100 Army Officers Menaced by Poison

Bucharest, Sept. 28 (A.P.).—Death by poisoning for more than 100 army officers was believed to have been prevented tonight by the last-minute arrest of a former restaurant manager in the military casino here.

Political motives were thought to have inspired the alleged poisoning plot. The plot was revealed by the librarian of the casino, who said he had been asked to put poison in the officers' food. The former restaurant manager was arrested when he handed over a package of poison.

Officers at whom the attempt was directed included some of the highest-ranking in the Rumanian army.

Money Plan Foes Snubbed By Reserve

Board 'Spanks' Advisers for Blaming Unrest on Finance Policy.

By Franklyn Waltman, Jr.

In an unusual procedure, the Federal Reserve Board yesterday gave a public spanking to the Federal Reserve Advisory Council because the latter complained the general business uncertainty was caused by an unbalanced budget, monetary experimentation, Government encroachment into private business and a delay in returning to the gold standard.

The board, by resolution adopted Thursday, ordered returned to the secretary of the advisory council the latter's observations received the day previously, and in effect told the council that the matters discussed were neither the business of the board nor the business of the council.

The action of the board, revealed after the council had made public its views in Chicago, caused general surprise here because none could remember a previous occasion when the board had flatly refused even to accept a statement from its advisory council, and because the opinion prevailed that it was the function of the council to make known its views regarding banking and currency problems.

Not Concerned, Is Impression.

Although the resolution only disavowed "jurisdiction" over the matters discussed by the council, the impressions given by the board's action was that it had no concern with such problems.

While the board has no authority to deal either with the budget or this Government's monetary experimentation or position in relation to gold, these matters vitally affect the functioning of the Reserve banks and their members, especially since the banks of the country have been called on to absorb the major part of securities issued by the Treasury to cover its increasing deficit.

During recent weeks there have been reports that high Treasury officials were giving serious consideration to abolition of the Reserve system in favor of a central bank and to amendment of the Federal Reserve act to bring that system more closely under control of the Treasury. It has been contended that the Government should have a tighter control over banking and credit policies.

Resembles Other Complaints.

At all events, the criticisms directed by the council to Administration policies closely resembled the complaints raised within the week by directors of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States; by business men who held a secret meeting at the Lido Club on Long Island and later laid their objections before Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau, jr., and by other business groups becoming articulate within the last two weeks.

The council consists of 12 members, one from each Reserve district elected annually by directors of the Reserve bank of that district. Their duty is to meet periodically in Washington, consult

First was the balloon "Kosciuszko," with a distance of 630 miles; second, the "Warszawa," 780 miles, and third, the "Polonia," 740 miles. The United States Navy balloon and the Buffalo Courier Express bag were not listed among the first nine places.

Suit Accuses Mother Of Vanderbilt Heiress

Gloria, 10, Is Neglected, Grandmother Holds Court Action.

New York, Sept. 28 (U.P.).—The tragic life story of a poor little rich girl, heiress to parts of America's greatest fortunes and to the names of men who have made financial history, was written into the records of the Supreme Court tonight.

The child is Gloria Laura Morgan Vanderbilt, 10.

Her grandmother, Mrs. Laura Kilpatrick Morgan, filed an affidavit in the court asserting that Gloria's mother, Mrs. Gloria Morgan Vanderbilt, is not a proper guardian for the little girl.

Mrs. Morgan is Mrs. Vanderbilt's mother.

The case thus presented the spectacle of a mother, high in the social world all her life, making bitter accusations against her own daughter.

Mrs. Morgan asked the court to grant custody of little Gloria to the child's paternal aunt, Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney.

The affidavit was submitted at a hearing on a writ of habeas corpus obtained by Mrs. Vanderbilt, widow of the late Reggie C. Vanderbilt, to recover custody of Gloria. Mrs. Vanderbilt said the aunt virtually "kidnaped" the child in Central Park last Friday.

Mrs. Morgan said flatly she did not believe Gloria should be in the

Rochester, N. Y., Sept. 28 (A.P.).—Robert Moses, New York City Park commissioner, won the Republican nomination for Governor tonight on the third ballot.

The official vote on the third ballot was Moses, 824; Rolland B. Marvin, 486; Seabury C. Mastick, 84; Samuel Seabury, 57; George U. Harvey, 50; giving Moses a majority of the 1,505 votes represented by the delegations.

Frequent clashes within various delegations marked the stormy balloting and the first roll call was not completed for two hours, while delegates wrangled with the chairman on procedure.

Balloting was begun late in the day after the convention had adopted its 15,000-word platform, a broad frontal attack on the "New Deal" policies of President Roosevelt and vigorous criticism of the Administration of Gov. Herbert H. Lehman.

At Odds on 14 Counts.

The platform listed 14 points on which the party expressed vigorous difference with the Democratic National Administration.

Although "helpful and constructive" measures were given "full credit" by the platform, the 14 basic criticisms embraced most of the major policies of the Roosevelt Administration.

The platform proposed 15 planks on National affairs, outlining broad policies for regulation of banking and finance, business recovery and elimination of ruinous competition. These were:

1. The American traditional Constitutional form of Government.

2. A return to the self-balancing, competitive system of political economy.

3. Strengthening of the laws against monopolies so as to preserve competition.

4. The principle of collective bargaining, the voluntary organization of workers into unions and their

U. S. Studying Farm Housing For Veterans

Project Would Take Needy Pensioners Off of Relief Rolls.

By Robert C. Albright.

A rehabilitation program for unemployed veterans, extending subsistence homestead aid to needy war pensioners, is under serious consideration at the White House, it was learned last night.

Conferences on the proposal were held yesterday by Federal Relief Administrator Harry Hopkins and Brig. Gen. Frank T. Hines, veterans administrator, following word that the President is interested in the project.

Federal purchase of farm land and construction of modest homes for veterans in need of relief, with repayments to the Government out of monthly veterans' pensions, are included in the plan.

Plan Being Studied.

Although no commitments were made yesterday at the White House, it is known that proposals were referred to Hopkins and Hines, and machinery was set up in both their departments to study the program further.

It was said the plan might first be undertaken in an experimental way, along lines of subsistence homestead projects for miners sponsored in West Virginia by Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt.

Developments followed a White House conference between President Roosevelt and Representative Wright Patman (Democrat), Texas, who has been advocating the step.

On leaving the White House, the Texan said he was not at liberty to discuss proposals, but on good authority it was learned the matter has been taken up with Federal relief and veterans' agencies.

In the Federal Relief Administration, Lawrence Westbrook, assistant to Hopkins, was directed to explore the plan, and in the Veterans' Administration, Gen. Hines designated Dr. E. G. Dexter, solicitor, to make a study.

Proposals call for purchase on a small scale of sufficient farm land

French Leader Cuffed; Will Meet Foe in Duel

Saint Malo, France, Sept. 28 (A.P.).—Guy Lachambre, former cabinet member, was slapped smartly on the face today, and tonight he planned to fight a duel with the man who insulted him.

The aggressor was Jacques Renouvin, Paris lawyer. He smacked Lachambre as a traffic snarl held up the former minister's automobile on a street here.

Student Electrocuted in Fall As He Clings to Live Wires

Both hands seared by the high voltage of crane-propelling wires in the Rosslyn Steel & Cement Co., Jefferson and K streets northwest, the body of Harvey Fauver, 15, a student in Columbia Junior High School, was found wedged between cement sacks and the steel wall of the plant late yesterday.

The youth had been missing from his home in the 1200 block of Twenty-ninth street northwest, since early Sunday morning, when he told his mother, Mrs. Margaret Fauver, he was going to play football.

"I'll be back in plenty of time for dinner," he called as he took his football and left.

The football was found yesterday, atop a pile of steel wiring, not far from his body.

When Harvey failed to return home Sunday, Mrs. Fauver notified police, who broadcast a lookout for him.

The body was discovered by James Bott, colored, who works for the concern. Peering down from the bags of cement, Bott saw Harvey's form, head downward, caught between the wall and the sacks.

He called fellow workers, and they aided police in extricating the body.

Harvey apparently entered the building Sunday morning by climbing through the fence inclosing the warehouse, police said. They believed he spied some object on the wall at the end of the structure and climbed the scaffolding, which extends up the wall, until he was above the top of the cement bags, 30 feet from the floor.

From this point, police think, he swung carefully along the stout wooden planks toward the Jefferson street side of the building, where the wires furnishing current to the moving crane are located. Apparently losing his balance, he seized the wires.

Relief Laxity Among States May Halt Aid, Hopkins Says

Conference on Needs Is Told Chests Should Share Burden.

Roosevelt Favors Help by U. S. Last

Baker Replies Agencies Hope Winter Will See End of Ills.

Withdrawal of Federal funds from States which "pass the buck" on relief to the Government was threatened yesterday by Harry L. Hopkins, relief director, after President Roosevelt said the Government should aid only when other efforts failed.

Hopkins also told 500 delegates to the 1934 Mobilization for Human Needs Conference that community chests which do not make direct appeals for direct relief are failing in their job.

Hopkins said: "I'm thoroughly fed up on States and cities passing the buck to us. I am beginning to think in some States we had better move right in again. The sense of public service in some parts of this country is mighty low."

Asked afterward if he meant that the Government should administer relief in North Dakota and Oklahoma, Hopkins replied, "No, I meant withhold relief."

Hopkins had said that Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, Nevada, North Carolina, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Tennessee, Virginia, Washington and Wisconsin should provide more of the cost of relief activities.

The President spoke from the south portico of the White House. Delegates were seated on the lawn. After the President they heard Newton D. Baker, chairman of the conference, reply that the agencies composing the mobilization ventured "to hope that this winter will see us past the crisis."

Chest Statement Surprises.

Hopkins' challenge to the delegates was delivered at the Mayflower Hotel. As a majority of community chests are planning campaigns for funds not for direct relief but for the support of agencies furnishing medical care, and character building, his statement surprised the gathering.

The majority of chest campaigns, including that of Washington, will appeal for funds for their agencies on the ground that the Federal, State and municipal governments are handling the direct relief problem.

Open appeals for contributions for direct relief in the chest drives in November, advocated by Hopkins, are in direct opposition to the policies to be followed in most of these campaigns.

At a dinner last night at the Mayflower Hotel, Baker declared Hopkins' statement that community chests should campaign for direct relief funds was "a happy omen that relief will come back to local agencies, as it was before the crisis brought the need for Federal aid." However, he declared that the major part of material aid must come from public agencies.

In the address which opened the conference the President emphasized the reluctance with which the Federal Government "has been compelled to undertake the task of supplementing the more normal methods which have been in use for many generations."

Support Is Cited.

"The church groups," the President said, "and the social groups organized on private lines, whether they act separately or through community chests, are an essential part of the structure of our life. The American people believe in them and support their fine objectives. That support again this year will attend the excellent enterprise you are launching today."

In his reply to the President, Baker declared: "It is out eager hope, as we know it is yours, that soon the entire burden of relief may be returned to local shoulders.

"In doing our full duty this winter, we may well hope to face, in the years that are to follow, more normal conditions; with our great griefs behind us, we as a people will be strengthened to enjoy improved and better times by

9 Killed, 20 Hurt In Train Smash-up

London Express Crashes; Victims Buried in Wreck.

Warrington, England, Sept. 28 (A.P.).—Nine persons were known to have been killed and at least 20 were injured in a rear-end collision near here tonight of a fast London Express and a slow local train.

Railroad officials gave the number of dead as nine. Another report which was not verified stated that 14 were killed and about 100 injured.

The first four cars of the express were derailed and two of them crushed. Cars at the rear of the local train also were crushed and many passengers were buried under the wreckage.

Mill Strikers, Refused Work, Will Try Again

Union Orders Return on Labor Board Advice as Strategy Move.

(Associated Press.)

Textile strikers who have been refused reemployment were ordered yesterday by union chiefs to apply for work again next Monday.

Acting upon the direct recommendation of the new Textile Labor Board, erstwhile strike leaders adopted this as a strategy move to gain general redetermination of the basis of discrimination complaints already filed with the board. It is expected the exact number of cases to be adjudicated by that tribunal will be learned.

"I conferred with the textile board today," said Francis J. Gorman, National strike committee chairman, "and I was authorized by the board to notify all local unions that have discrimination cases to send the workers to the mills on Monday morning and from that point we shall learn how many cases of discrimination we will have to handle."

The members of the board are strongly in favor of conciliatory methods and attitude in approaching these charges and all other labor disputes with which they must deal. More forceful procedure is to be reserved as a last resort.

The board is understood to feel that with the erstwhile strikers again seeking work, the mill owners will be given a new opportunity to comply, without appreciable loss of face, with President Roosevelt's request that all be rehired.

In addition, it will give them time to consider the recommendation of the Cotton Textile Code Authority that the owners respond to the Presidential appeal except in the case of strikers who engaged in lawless violence during the walkout.

This recommendation was contained in a statement pledging the cooperation of the manufacturers in carrying out the peace plan proposed by the Winant mediation board, but claiming the right of consultation before code changes are made and contending creation of the new labor board was unnecessary.

Gorman yesterday accused the code authority of "subterfuge" in the reemployment recommendation. "In fact it is an open invitation to the employers to discriminate," he charged. "Who is to be the judge of those the employers claim engaged in 'lawless violence' and what does the chairman of the code authority say about the indictments in Honea Path, where the agents of the employers are charged with the murder of our members?

"We are certain that this sort of camouflage and evasion will not fool the textile board."

President Pens Plea for Peace

Sends Message to London Conference Urging Youth be Told of War.

Urging that the children of all lands be taught the "grim lesson of the wasteful destruction of war," President Roosevelt yesterday sent a message of greeting to the London Congress of the Federation Internalie des Anciens Combatants.

His message, sent through Louis Johnson, chairman of the American delegation to the congress, and made public by the State Department, follows:

"I send to the congress my sincere greetings and ardent hope for full success in your efforts to further friendship and neighborly understanding among the nations.

"May the memory of your companionship in arms be dedicated to the firm resolve to teach to coming generations in all lands the grim lesson of the wasteful destruction of war.

"Impress upon them that war can be avoided; that by mutual trust and respect the way can be prepared for the peoples of the earth to live in harmony and peace. You who have lived through the horrible experience of armed conflict are better qualified than other men to lead the youth of the world away from thoughts of war toward thoughts of peace."

Veterans' Housing Project Studied to provide a livelihood for partially disabled veterans and their families.

The Government would locate small homes on these subsistence plots. To finance the construction veterans would make regular payments from Government pensions.

It was estimated there are 360,000 veterans who receive an average of $42 monthly from the Federal Treasury. While this alone is insufficient to support unemployed veterans and dependents, proponents argue it would be more than ample if invested in farms that were made to produce.

Advocates of the program insist Relief Administrator Hopkins has $50,000,000 that could be used to launch the project, and the President could supply $100,000,000 more. Indications were, however, that if finally approved at the White House, a much smaller amount would be spent on the initial experiment.

Montgomery County Enrollment Tuesday

Montgomery County, Md., will hold its second registration of this year Tuesday, it was announced yesterday by the board of election supervisors.

Registration offices will be open in the county's 29 voting precincts for the registration of new voters. The offices will be open from 9 a. m. until 9 p. m.

Arms Inquiry Just Starting, Nye Declares

President Is Intensely Interested in Quiz, Chairman Says.

An "endless trail of evidence," sensational in character, will necessitate the return of witnesses who already have been heard by the Senate committee investigating munitions, it was declared yesterday by Chairman Gerald P. Nye after a visit to the White House.

"I found the President intensely interested in the investigation," the North Dakotan said, adding that one result of the disclosures may be the development of an "international understanding" on the traffic in arms.

"I am told," he said, "that the British will conduct an inquiry of their own after Parliament convenes next month. Already British legislators are cabling for copies of the hearings."

The Senator declared that two other members of the committee besides himself—Bone, of Washington, and Pope, of Idaho—have been outspoken in favor of nationalizing industry in the event of war.

Declining to forecast recommendations of the full committee, he said, nevertheless, he believed it self-evident that legislation is needed to tighten the customs laws to make embargoes more effective and to make impossible "such profits as were made by the Du Ponts."

The famous Delaware family realized more than 400 per cent profit from the World War, he said. This has enabled them, he went on, to set up "what amounts to an industrial empire," details of which, he added, are yet to be established.

"I don't think we're through with any of them," he said. "I think we'll have to have them all back when the committee meets again on December 3."

Text of the President's Speech

Here is the text of President Roosevelt's address today to the 1934 Mobilization for Human Needs Conference:

"I am happy that for the second time the conference on the mobilization for human needs comes here to the White House. In so doing you emphasize with me the National character of our common task, for I like to feel that I share responsibility with all of you who are here representing every part of our country.

"Your work in the past has been of such outstanding success that I am confident this year you will achieve an all-time record.

"In addressing you last year I emphasized the simple fact that the responsibility of the individual and of the family for the well-being of their neighbors must never cease. Beginning with those first winters of suffering in Jamestown and at Plymouth, it has been the American habit to render aid to those who need it. Through the centuries, as the first struggling villages developed into communities and cities and counties and States, destitution and want of every description have been cared for in the first instance by community help.

Cites Growth of Groups.

With the enormous growth of population and with the complexities of the past generation, community efforts have been supplemented by the formation of great National organizations designed to coordinate and stimulate those local groups who are striving not only to take care of those in need but also to stimulate better conditions of health, of child welfare, of mental hygiene, of recreation, and in the many other splendid objectives which are part and parcel of our National life of today.

"It is right, I think, for us to emphasize that the American family must be the unit which engages our greatest interest and concern. With this we must stress once more the task of each community to assist in maintaining and building up that family unit.

"No thinking or experienced person insists today that the responsibility of the community shall be eliminated by passing on this great and humane task to any central body at the seat of Federal government. You and I know that it has been with reluctance and only because we have realized the imperative need for additional help that the Federal Government has been compelled to undertake the task of supplementing the more normal methods which have been in use for many generations.

"I repeat what I told you last year—that the primary responsibility for community needs rests upon the community itself. That if every effort has been used by any given community and has proved insufficient, then it is the duty of the State to supplement, with the resources of the State, the additional needs up to the limit of its power. That, finally, it is only when both of these efforts, taken together, prove insufficient that the Federal Government has any duty to add its resources to the common cause.

Increased Vigilance Urged.

"It is inevitable, of course, that in carrying on relief—whether in the form of work relief or home relief—in an area that includes every State, every county and every city in the Union, local inefficiency is bound to exist in some instances. It is very definitely our task, yours and mine, to see to it that during the coming winter there shall be increased vigilance in every locality against the giving of relief except to those who definitely and clearly need it and are entitled to it.

"In a great emergency system we are establishing with each passing month a greater degree of efficiency, and we are eliminating many of the evils which of necessity attended our first efforts. The trained workers which belong to the many organizations represented in this conference have an opportunity and a duty to see to it, first of all, that destitution is relieved, and, secondly, that no individual and no family shall be entitled to public assistance if that individual or that family does not deserve it.

"Your work and the work of local, State and Federal agencies is so closely associated that your success is vital to the success of government. I am confident that the people of this country, in each and every community, will understand the importance of cooperating in this great mobilization for human needs."

Navy and Airship Hunt Lost Yacht

Craft 37 Days Out From Hawaii With 3 Aboard.

Hilo, Hawaii, Sept. 28 (AP).—Unreported since she left here 37 days ago for San Pedro, Calif., the tiny yacht Naitamba, with three aboard, was sought today by naval vessels and merchant ships and the dirigible Macon.

The 40-foot yawl left here August 23 bearing Skipper Dick Smith, of Hollywood, whose sister is said to be guardian for Baby Leroy, child actress; Fred Rebel, an Australian, and William Butts, 14, supposed to be a child movie actor.

Yachtsmen said the little Naitamba might have been delayed by being becalmed. Nevertheless, word was awaited with some anxiety from the Coast Guard cutter Perseus, which began searching from San Diego yesterday, and from the airship Macon, cruising along the California Coast.

N. Y. Dock Truce Stays Strike of 40,000 Men

New York, Sept. 28 (AP).—A truce was reached today between deep-sea steamship operators and the International Longshoremen's Association, preventing a threatened strike of 40,000 waterfront workers expected to be declared next Monday.

Representatives of the union agreed to accept a proposal by the operators that they await the outcome of deliberations of President Roosevelt's arbitration board, now considering the situation on the Pacific Coast, where a strike recently was settled.

Maryland Asks Bids On Macadam Roadway

Bids for the construction of macadam roadway between the Cedar Grove-Damascus (Md.) road and the Damascus-Woodfield road east of Cedar Grove was advertised yesterday by the Maryland State roads commission.

The new section of highway will be part of the Montgomery County public works program and will utilize labor furnished by the National reemployment office in Rockville. The commission will open bids in Baltimore October 9.

Mrs. Spurrier Named Head of D.A.R. Group

Mrs. Frances G. Spurrier, of Laytonsville, Md., has been elected president of Ridgley Brown Chapter, United Daughters of the Confederacy. Mrs. Spurrier succeeds Mrs. Helen P. Weedon, of Rockville, who has headed the chapter for the past five years.

Other officers chosen at the annual meeting in Rockville were Mrs. Weedon, first vice president; Mrs. Anna Tolson, second vice president; Mrs. Fannie T. Smith, treasurer; Mrs. Lena T. Brown, recording secretary; Mrs. Pauline Hutchinson, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Lorraine G. Graef, registrar; Miss May Sellman, historian, and Mrs. Kate Warfield, custodian of flags.

Roosevelt, Davis Plan Final Naval Conference

President Roosevelt said yesterday he would hold a final conference on American naval policy with Norman H. Davis, American representative at the London naval parleys, on Wednesday or Thursday of next week, according to the Associated Press.

Davis talked briefly with the President last night, and then left for New York City for the weekend. He will return to Washington Tuesday to resume discussions with Secretary Hull and other State and Navy Department officials and receive final instructions from the President before sailing for London on October 10.

a recollection of the courage with which we sustained one another as we passed through the shadows in the valley."

After the session on the White House lawn, Mrs. Roosevelt opened the meeting of the National Women's Committee of the mobilization with the statement that a realization of "how the other half lives" was a valuable outgrowth of the annual mobilization.

This gathering, attended by 40 State women campaign leaders, including Mrs. Baker, Mrs. Thomas A. Edison and Mrs. Grace Morrison Poole, was held in the state dining room of the White House. Mrs. Roosevelt is chairman of the committee.

The President's wife stressed the need of using actual descriptions of actual suffering in creating public spirit for giving. She urged State campaign chairmen to start the fall's chest campaigns with knowledge of local relief needs.

Miss Katherine Lenroot, acting director of the Children's Bureau, declared 7,000,000 children under 16 were on relief rolls. This is 40 per cent of the relief burden, she said.

Task for Government.

Mrs. Roosevelt also was heard at the dinner at the Mayflower. There she again stressed that Community Chest workers must bring home the actual facts of need to givers. Declaring that social justice and security should be the basis of our civilization, she said that it is the Government's responsibility that every citizen be able to earn a living.

The depression has taught this country, Mrs. Roosevelt said, that there is a level, a standard of living below which people can not be allowed to live. The task of private agencies, she said, is aiding in the educational work which will make a proper standard of living possible.

Mrs. Roosevelt was introduced by Mr. Baker, chairman of the dinner. Frederick R. Kellogg, first vice president of Community Chests and Councils, Inc., was another speaker. He declared that the conference must stand for voluntary agencies rather than bureaucracy in administration of relief. John Stewart Bryan, president of the Community Chests, Inc., also spoke.

Both the President and Hopkins stressed that relief, whether public or private, should not go to the undeserving. Hopkins declared, "We have no business spending the taxpayers' money for persons who do not belong on relief rolls.

Winter Relief Plans.

"We intend to see during the coming winter that those persons who need relief get it," the FERA head declared. He said the relief situation this winter is not going to be so bad as he thought it would be.

Hopkins asserted that he knew from reading his mail that "all the crackpots and fuzzy theorists don't work for the United States Government." Some write letters to him suggesting ways of combating his relief problem, he said.

After the luncheon the conference met in a session on "A Community's Human Services in the Depression." Mr. Kellogg was chairman.

Mrs. Paist, describing the work of character building agencies, declared the gigantic relief program of the country has made us feel that "people are all mouths and stomachs" and that it is now time to focus attention "upon what people do between meals."

Fear was expressed by Mr. Lee that when public relief had ceased to be "news" and lost the "glamor of the New Deal," it would be administered in the "less inspring atmosphere of governmental bureaucracy."

Dr. Farrand said that "the unusual burdens faced by our Public Health Service throw an unusual responsibility today upon private social agencies in this field." He declared medical care for the "newly made poor" was grossly inadequate in 1933.

Decency Group to Sit In Judgment on Hays

New York, Sept. 28 (AP).—The New York Herald Tribune says the interfaith committee, formed last July to combat indecency in public entertainment, will meet within two weeks to determine whether in its opinion Will Hays has kept his pledge to reform the motion-picture industry.

October 10 has been set as the tentative date by Mgr. Michael J. Laveille, vicar general of the Roman Catholic Archdiocese of New York, who is chairman of the committee.

Japan to Call Diet For Typhoon Relief

Tokyo, Sept. 28 (U.P.).—A special session of the Diet probably will be called shortly to consider special relief measures for typhoon victims and farmers needing government aid, it was revealed today.

Rumors were current in Osaka, center of the typhoon and tidal wave which took upwards of 2,000 lives, that the great industrial plants there would be moved inland. Many were wrecked in the storm.

Between You and Me

Upton Sinclair Headed for Governorship, Hoover Republican's Cry of Woe.

By Raymond Clapper

ONE prominent Hoover Republican from California sorrowfully reports that Upton Sinclair, the cooling firebrand, probably will be elected Governor there unless a big break goes against him.

The prospects of success have tamed him enough to induce Senator William G. McAdoo and George Creel to climb into the cage with him. Once the rebel who fought in "The Jungle" and wound up with an attack on "The Profits of Religion," he is now the suave, pleasant reformer who wants to make California's sun shine again by having the State run a barter system.

Los Angeles County, which casts one-third of the entire vote of the State, formerly was the strongest Republican section. Now it is for Sinclair. This county has 500,000 persons on relief—99 per cent of them supporters of Sinclair.

He has suffered some defections from Democratic leaders in San Francisco and northern California, and there is where the Republicans plan to make their main fight. William Jennings Bryan, jr., son of the Commoner, defeated for Democratic nomination as lieutenant governor, has retired to his tent and won't support Sinclair. Republicans have considerable money. All they need is the votes.

• • • •

But it is no use trying to figure out what is happening in politics. It is a Chinese puzzle and the pieces don't fit. The Republican candidate for Governor in Maryland, H. Whinna Nice, accepts the nomination to the Roosevelt tune of "Happy Days Are Here Again," and promises that he can get more money for Maryland from the Federal Government than Gov. Ritchie, with his Old Dealish inhibitions. France, the Republican Senatorial candidate, would pass for an Administration left-winger. . . The Republican candidate for Senator in Wisconsin, John B. Chapple, promises that if the voters will give him Bob La Follette's seat, he will work for the soldier bonus, for prohibiting foreclosure on homes, for payment in full of all depositors in closed banks and for several other things on the Republican National committee's index expurgatorius against Government spending. . . Senator Arthur Capper (Republican), Kansas, indorses AAA and the State Republican platform, congratulates its Governor, Alf Landon, and his Legislature for their cooperation with the Roosevelt Administration and promises to continue it. . . And of all things, Senator David A. Reed and Gov. Pinchot are about to kiss and make up. Reed ran for renomination on a straight anti-New Deal platform and Pinchot, the lusty Galahad of yore, lambasted him as a tool of the Mellons but lost out. . . Then those southern Illinois Republicans. They were against AAA last spring when hogs were around $5. Now hogs are around $9, the Government is loaning them 55 cents on their sealed corn, and Republican Congressional candidates are changing their tune.

Able Administration publicity agents overlooked a bet this week. The new stock market margin regulations were so reasonable as to be generally satisfactory to Wall street, but instead of giving this development a right of way in the news Friday, when it would have had a reassuring effect, the new NRA setup, with Donald Richberg in command, was announced at the same time, and it monopolized attention—and unfavorable attention—among business men, who remember Richberg's early NRA speeches about the economic revolution. The pleasant, diplomatic former labor lawyer is not as left-handed as he was a year ago, but that fact is not as widely realized as it will be a little later.

House Majority Leader Byrns has indorsed Representative Charles West, of Ohio, for director of the budget.

The latest definition of "woof" comes from Herbert Hoover himself:

"The woof of our form of government was woven into the warp of liberty at the Revolution."

• • • •

Jesse Jones, the big, broad-shouldered chief of the R. F. C., can't get over the life-time habits developed when he was putting over real estate promotions, as for instance the telephone conversation which impressed an office full of newspaper reporters. Jones picked up his telephone and one of his assistants was on the other end.

"How much are you collecting?" he asked, glancing significantly at his audience. "Two and a half a day?" he repeated after a pause. "That's fine. And how are you getting along with the Treasury?" Pause. "Paid back ten last week? Good."

That is, the R. F. C. is collecting $2,500,000 a day and last week paid back to the U. S. Treasury $10,000,000. Mr. Jones doesn't want to be classed with the heavy-spending sections of the New Deal alphabet.

Hauptmann's Mother Visited By N. Y. Sleuth

But German Home Fails to Yield Any Clew to Kidnaping.

Dresden, Sept. 28 (U.P.).—Investigation into the affairs of the family and friends of Bruno Richard Hauptmann on this side of the Atlantic failed today to turn up evidence that he shipped Lindbergh ransom money back to Germany.

Arthur Johnson, New York detective in charge of the inquiry at this end, indicated he felt the effort a "wild goose chase." He planned to proceed to Leipzig tomorrow for a clean-up before returning to America.

The American detective, accompanied by local authorities, visited friends of Hauptmann and searched the house in Kamenz occupied by Frau Hauptmann, the former convict's mother.

Johnson said he searched the house thoroughly, as well as other places Hauptmann frequented when living in Kamenz—but found nothing suspicious.

Cobh, Ireland, Sept. 28 (U.P.).—"I have done nothing wrong," Adolf Ulrich said on arrival here today en route to Europe.

Ulrich's hurried departure last Saturday caused reports that he might know something of the Lindbergh kidnaping case.

Explaining why he took a tug to catch a liner at New York, Ulrich said he was late at the pier and had to catch the ship down the harbor. He insisted he had decided two weeks ago to sail and got his passport visa, only to miss the ship at the last moment.

Tax on Burley Up to 6.1 Cents

Maryland Tobacco Levy Dropped Altogether, AAA Announces.

The AAA last night announced that the processing tax on burley tobacco had been increased from 2 cents a pound to 6.1 cents a pound and that the processing levy on Maryland tobacco had been eliminated entirely, the United Press reported.

The tax on burley tobacco to be used in the manufacture of plug chewing and twist, however, was increased to only 4.1 cents a pound. The changes in tax regulations are to be effective October 1.

AAA officials said the changes in the processing tax rate were "necessary in order to effectuate the declared policy of the Agriculture Adjustment Act.

"The new rates are equal to the difference between the current average farm price and the fair exchange value of Maryland and burley tobacco, respectively," officials said.

No change is provided in the rates of processing taxes on tobacco other than Maryland and burley.

Adams Joins Club For Canoe Racing

Other Noted Yachtsmen Also on Roster at Easton.

Easton, Md., Sept. 28 (AP).—Former Secretary of the Navy Charles Francis Adams, skipper of the famous J-5 sloop, Yankee, has become a member of the Chesapeake Bay Log Canoe Association, it was learned from L. Herbert Griffith, jr., association secretary.

In addition to Adams, a number of nationally known yachtsmen recently have become affiliated with the organization. The old log sailing canoes, speedy craft peculiar to Chesapeake waters, have a wide appeal to every sailor who sees them in action.

Among those who have shown their interest in the revival of log canoe racing are Commodore H. W. Merryman, of the Campobello Yacht Club; Harry Braith Davis, George A. Whiting, Fred F. Stone, editor of Yachting, and a large number of water sportsmen of this section.

Vanderbilt Heiress' Mother Is Accused custody of her mother, "who is my daughter," because of these facts:

"We lived in Paris for 4½ years and during that period my daughter paid absolutely no attention to little Gloria.

"She devoted herself exclusively to her own pleasures. Usually she slept until 1 or 2 p. m. and from that time until the early hours of the following morning she was at cocktail parties and night clubs.

"Her constant companions were people who lead a very gay life. She took long trips to Germany and other places, leaving no forwarding address. She seldom wrote to me or inquired about the baby."

The grandmother said that as recently as September 18 Gloria's mother tried to teach the child to mix cocktails.

The affidavit was replete with statements designed to show neglect on the part of Mrs. Vanderbilt.

An affidavit of Mrs. Emma Keislich, who has been Gloria's nurse since the child was 2 weeks old, quoted Gloria as saying that if she had to return to her mother's custody she "would jump out the window."

Gloria was brought into court with her mother and grandmother. The child, pale and frightened, clutched her aunt's hand. She did not look at her mother.

The case was adjourned until Monday, when it will be heard in open court.

Gloria, who will inherit some $4,000,000, remained in the custody of her aunt tonight.

Spoon Makes Hauptmann's Weapons

New York officials feared that these four pieces of a broken spoon, found secreted in the cell of Bruno Richard Hauptmann, might have been fashioned into a weapon with which the Lindbergh kidnap suspect would attempt suicide. The spoon was stolen from the breakfast table and attempts had been made to sharpen the bowl.

morrow. Faweett said he was being guided in his action by the advice of his own physician.

The attorney took a list of questions framed by reporters and returned with what he said were Hauptmann's answers. They follow:

Q. Do you still claim that you are not guilty of extortion?

A. I am innocent of everything.

Q. What word do you want sent to your mother in Germany?

A. Tell her that I am innocent and that I love her.

Can't Understand It All.

Q. What was your reaction to the extortion indictment voted against you?

A. I can not see how any grand jury could accuse me of anything.

Q. Were you as nervous as you appeared in court yesterday?

A. I was nervous.

Q. What are your thoughts about your wife and child?

A. I love them dearly and hope to return to them soon.

Q. Do you still feel confident of acquittal?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. Did Isidor Fisch indicate by any hint that he was mixed up in the kidnaping?

A. No.

Q. Did you suffer a leg injury early in 1932, and, if so, what was the cause and where did it happen?

A. No.

Q. Did you ever see the Lindbergh baby dead or alive?

A. I never saw the Lindbergh baby dead or alive.

Q. Are you taking Mr. Fawcett fully into your confidence so that he can better defend you?

A. I am.

Q. Did you know Dr. John F. Condon before the kidnaping of the Lindbergh baby?

A. No.

Q. Did you spend the money with the knowledge that it was ransom money?

A. No.

Silent on "Third Degree."

Hauptmann would not answer a question whether police had used a rubber hose to beat him in their efforts to obtain a confession. This question was asked although there have been indications that police have carefully avoided resorting to third degree methods with him, fearful that such tactics might serve ultimately to damage their case.

The fact, however, that Hauptmann passed the question suggested that he might claim he was treated brutally when his case comes to trial.

Removal of Hauptmann to New Jersey early next week was indicated in a statement by an official close to the legal developments in the case. He said that the prisoner probably will be transported under heavy guard to the State prison at Trenton to await trial on a murder charge in the little town of Flemington, seat of Hunterdon County.

Wife Denied Visit.

Mrs. Anna Hauptmann, wife of the German former convict, spent two hours at the Bronx County Jail in a vain effort to see her husband. Previously she had brought him clean shirts and socks, and some money to buy cigars. When she tried to get to visit with him, however, she was told to "clear out of here."

Attorney General David Wilentz of New Jersey had little to say following a long conference with District Attorney Foley. The conference was for a "general discussion" of the case, Wilentz said. It did not, he declared, concern extradition of the prisoner.

Though he said New Jersey will seek extradition as soon as the State's investigation is completed, the attorney general would not say whether his State has a case against Hauptmann exclusive of the evidence gained by New York authorities.

Australia to England Flight Mark Broken

London, Sept. 28 (AP).—A new unofficial flight record from Australia to England was established this morning when James Melrose, 20-year-old Australian flier, stepped out of his plane at Croydon Airdome after covering the distance from Darwin in 8 days and 9 hours.

This is compared with James A. Mollison's official record of 8 days and 22 hours established in 1931. Melrose came to England to enter the London-to-Melbourne air race next month.

Mexican Attacks Deplored by Pope

Pius Says Church Situation There Grows Worse.

Vatican City, Sept. 28 (AP).—Reported religious persecutions in Mexico were deplored today by Pope Pius in an audience with Mgr. Arthur J. Drossaerts, Archbishop of San Antonio.

The Pope said he had confirmed from his own information reports brought to him by Archbishop Drossaerts that persecutions "of many kinds" were going on continually in "stricken Mexico."

The religious situation there is getting worse, instead of better, he said, adding that there was also political danger in the situation, owing to the spread of Bolshevism.

NRA Lighting Recovery Road Says Deterding

(Copyright, 1934, by the United Press.)

London, Sept. 28.—A conviction that President Roosevelt's New Deal program is sound and that, despite the NRA now under reorganization, it will prove that the United States Chief Executive is on the right track was expressed by Sir Henri W. A. Deterding today.

Sir Henri declared that his recent visit to the United States had convinced him Mr. Roosevelt is heading in the right direction to restore confidence and economic stability.

"I don't deny that Mr. Roosevelt has a tremendous task," Sir Henri said, "but he is on the right track. His biggest problem now is to find key men to handle the various segments of the whole immense problem. They must be men of outstanding ability, capable of superb teamwork and, of course, absolutely loyal to him.

"That is not as easy as it sounds. But his instinct seems to be to reduce every problem to its simplest elements, and that is the mark of wisdom."

Commends Silver Program.

Sir Henri, head of the Royal Dutch-Shell Oil combine with interests around the world, said he was convinced that the Roosevelt silver program would be carried out to the end, adding that he expected it would give the United States "the only 100 per cent honest currency in the world."

He took a significant shot at the banking systems of the powers and predicted a change in banking was essential and inevitable before the world could return to normalcy.

Sir Henri said the world probably was in for a "monetary tempest" this fall "if the old worn-out bankers' idea of controlling industry is adhered to."

"Bankers must get back to the idea that they exist to serve industry, not to boss it. That's the one big contribution which British banking has made to the world. The reason the big British banks have come through this blizzard without turning a hair is that they have been true bankers, and not pseudo-industrialists.

"The Americans now understand this, and their banking will be all the better for the divorce between banking and the ownership of American industry."

Commenting on the European gold bloc nations such as France and Holland, sticking to the gold standard, Sir Henri declared he felt them to be "profoundly unwise."

"They are still thinking in terms of gold instead of in terms of labor and industry. That is the fundamental monetary mistake—and the members of the gold bloc are persisting in it."

'Depression Miner' Finds $43 Nugget

Roseburg, Oreg., Sept. 28 (AP).—W. T. Penninger, a "depression miner" in the Cow Creek district, was broke, hungry and discouraged.

As he bent over his sluice box to clean the few small flakes of gold, he saw a yellow nugget. With the $43.40 the nugget brought, Penninger brought new clothes, shoes, a grubstake and started back to his diggings.

Vienna, Sept. 28 (AP).—Bearing the emblem of the hammer and sickle, thousand of Communist leaflets containing the warning, "We are coming soon," circulated through Vienna today. Police said they were unable to trace the source of the handbills.

Broad Changes Of NRA Policy To Be Avoided

Richberg Offers Pledge as Business Shows Dissatisfaction.

"about the extent to which the recovery act suspended the antitrust laws. As I reread the act, it exempts from the antitrust laws those operations under codes undertaken to prevent unfair competition. On the other hand, it does not exempt operations which tend toward unfair competition."

Richberg lauded Johnson, but at the same time made his first admission of any differences with the general.

"I should like to make it clear," he said, "that the reorganization of NRA is proceeding along lines upon which Gen. Johnson and I were in agreement months ago in our discussions and in recommendations to the President.

Agreed on Board.

"In the first place, we agreed on the desirability of a board to administer NRA. Second, we discussed creation of the industrial emergency committee when that was proposed by the President and we had the same ideas as to its functions and personnel. Any differences of opinion between the general and myself have related to methods and personnel rather than to purposes or policies of NRA.

"In my opinion Gen. Johnson performed an extraordinary service and I don't believe any one else could have accomplished all that he did in one year."

In a statement on division of duties Richberg explained:

"The industrial emergency committee has the duty of making recommendations to the President concerning problems affecting the NRA and other emergency agencies and of determining with the approval of the President, the general policies of the Administration of the National industrial recovery act.'

"This means that the industrial emergency committee acts, first, in an advisory capacity to the President and, second, under his direction, to coordinate the administration of such policies by all the governmental agencies concerned.

Directed by President.

"The National Industrial Recovery Board will administer Title I of the recovery act under the direction of the President just as other emergency agencies are administered.

"The industrial emergency committee is composed of the heads of departments or agencies dealing with 'problems of relief, public works, labor disputes and industrial recovery, together with allied problems of agricultural recovery.' It should be obvious that this committee is not intended to direct the operations of any of the departments or agencies represented on the committee, but to serve as a means of coordinating their activities in conformity with consistent policies approved by the President."

The President's cotton garment stay prevented the original reduction order from becoming effective Monday. He instructed the Williams board to appoint an impartial three-man committee to conduct a hearing and submit recommendations before October 10.

Before suspending the order Mr. Roosevelt obtained from the industry's code authority an agreement to be bound by whatever decision he reaches ultimately. The understanding was regarded as particularly significant as for weeks manufacturers have been threatening to disregard the order.

$1,552,358 Order Placed for Army

Detroit Firm Gets Largest Truck Contract.

Contracts for the construction of 849 vehicles to be built for the Army at a cost of $1,552,358.27 were awarded yesterday, according to a statement at the War Department by Maj. Gen. Louis Bash, quartermaster general.

The largest single item in the list of contracts went to the Federal Motor Truck Co., of Detroit. This organization will build 250 trucks at an average cost of $2,354 for a total price of $588,515.

The Fargo Motor Corporation of Detroit will build 242 trucks at an average cost of $1,476.21 for a total of $357,242.82. The remaining business was divided into seven orders of varying size.

Trade Turmoil Blamed on NRA By Harriman

Act Conducive to Strikes, Business Leader Tells Junior Chamber.

Apparently undismayed by President Roosevelt's decision to ignore the questionnaire sent him by the United States Chamber of Commerce, Henry I. Harriman, president, yesterday gave an outline of his criticism of the New Deal in an address read to directors of the Junior Chamber of Commerce.

Ten conclusions were set forth briefly "to indicate the present direction of my own thinking," Harriman said, "and, I believe, the thinking of many progressive business men." The speech was read by the secretary of the Junior Chamber of Commerce in Harriman's absence.

More than a score of directors and officers of the organization, all under 35 years old, met at the United States Chamber of Commerce for their first session of a two-day meeting.

E. Richard West, of Los Angeles, president, expressed the view that reorganization of the NRA would prove beneficial to the business world.

Criticizes Recovery Act.

Harriman, in his address, criticized the recovery act for attempting to regiment business, for being conducive to industrial unrest and strikes, and for attempting price-fixing and other monopolistic practices. He expressed the belief that "a permanent act can be drawn which will be of great value both to industry and to labor, and which will not improperly burden the consumer."

Section 7(a) has caused dissatisfaction, he said, "because the great right of collective bargaining has been granted to labor without corresponding obligations and liabilities."

He expressed the view that "the right of collective bargaining necessarily implies the incorporation of unions and full responsibility for their action."

Strikes should not be called, he said, until a secret ballot of all workers involved shows a majority favorable to such action and until an investigation is made of the workers' demands by an impartial board.

"Social Reforms Necessary."

"Social reforms to alleviate the tragedy of sickness, accidents, old age and unemployment are necessary and inevitable," Harriman said, touching by implication on the President's social security program.

"The danger, from the social and the business standpoint, is that too much may be attempted too quickly, with a consequent burden upon industry greater than it can bear.

"I hope that two principles will be observed: First, that mutual contributions shall be made by employers, employes and the State, and that reserves will take into account the hazards of each industry, and not attempt to place a common burden upon all.

"Second, that industrial reserves for unemployment shall include the gradual development of a more secure method of life for those who are industrially employed, embracing the sane combination of subsistence farming and industrial employment that will greatly add to the security and happiness of the worker and benefit the employer."

Regulation "Has Gone Too Far."

In a final blast at the Administration, Harriman said:

"Government regulation of business is justified when the public interest demands it. But in many cases it has gone too far and has attempted to regulate functions which are really those of management. The mistakes should be corrected.

"In my judgment, there is little or no defense for public ownership of industries or utilities; the only possible warrant would be if regulation had proved inadequate and ineffective.

"I believe, therefore, that the entry of Government into the field of industry is unwise economically and politically, and will eventually result in increased debt, increased inefficiency, and increased unemployment."

His Other Conclusions.

Harriman's other conclusions, in brief, were:

The ultimate cause of the depression was the loss in life, property and in moral and ethical standards that resulted from the World War. International peace, consequently, must be preserved, but the United States must maintain an adequate defensive force.

Foreign commerce should be extended by "wise reciprocal treaties, similar to the one made with Cuba."

Commodity prices should be restored to "somewhere near the 1926 level," but by a gradual process "and not through monetary inflation."

Much of the current radicalism will disappear with the restoration of employment. "Radicalism thrives in hard times."

"Further decline in the number of hours devoted to producing wealth would mean, under present conditions, a lessening of our National income and a lower standard of living." The United States needs to produce "more rather than less wealth."

Crop Reduction Urged.

A long-time remedy for removing 50,000,00 acres of marginal and submarginal land from cultivation is needed. Most of this land was added during the war.

"Balanced budgets are essential, and the best way to balance the budgets of our Federal, State and municipal governments is through drastic economy."

Mr. West yesterday called on President Roosevelt and gave him a copy of the "Program of Americanism" sponsored by the Junior Chamber of Commerce, which is directing a fight against Communism and other radical elements.

Today the directors will be in almost continuous business session, and tonight will hold a banquet at the Mayflower Hotel. Speakers will include Assistant Secretary of Commerce Dickinson and Robert V. Fleming, president of the Riggs National Bank.

Politics and People

By Elliott Thurston

Friends of the Administration and the Federal Reserve System will be at a loss to understand upon what theory the Federal Reserve Board has refused to receive the recommendations of its Federal Advisory Council.

The Advisory Council is created under the Federal Reserve act. By section 12 of that act it is specifically charged with the duty and power, among other things, "to make recommendations in regard to . . . the general affairs of the reserve banking system." Its members, chosen by the boards of directors of each Federal Reserve bank, are leading bankers, one from each Federal Reserve district. It is a representative and responsible group, with an important responsibility.

If any criticism of it is justified it is that it has not been vigorous or vocal enough in expressing its views. In November of last year it did express its views to the Reserve Board—an opinion that the country should return at the earliest possible moment to the gold standard. The board received those views.

At another recent meeting, the Advisory Council decided to "restate" and to amplify those views. It adopted and sent to the board an extensive expression of its opinion reiterating its conviction that the country should get back without delay to a gold standard and expressing its lack of faith in monetary manipulation, its concern over the budget, its objection to Government encroachments upon private business.

* * * *

Yesterday J. J. Thomas, acting governor of the board, made public a letter in which he quoted a resolution "adopted unanimously by the board"—though it should be said that at least one member was out of town—returning the recommendations to the Advisory Council and, in effect, rebuking the council for having presented the recommendations.

The resolution objected that "the matter contained in the statement referred to does not come within the jurisdiction of the Federal Reserve Board," and the Advisory Council's attention was drawn to Section 12.

This is the first time the board has ever refused to entertain the views of the Advisory Council, though the council has often expressed them on legislation and other matters which, technically, might be considered outside the jurisdiction of the Reserve Board. But if the purpose of the law were to restrict the advisory council to expressing its views merely upon matters strictly within the jurisdiction of the Reserve Board, why did the law expressly empowers the council to make recommendations concerning "the general affairs of the Reserve Banking System?"

Are not matters of monetary policy, the budget, the effect of encroachments upon private business, closely interrelated and decidedly "affairs" or matters of concern of the Reserve Banking System? Perhaps not, technically. But to the public at large the jurisdictional objection will seem strained.

* * * *

To the sideline observer it will seem that the board was not so much exercised about the strict interpretation of the law—else why was not the point raised a year ago?—as about the nature of the views expressed. But whether one agrees with them or not, they are the views of a representative and responsible group of leading bankers, one from each Reserve district in the United States. Certainly they are not going to be suppressed, but rather they are bound to be accenuated by the board's refusal to receive them.

And certainly no champion of the board is going to defend the refusal on the ground that the views expressed may be unpleasant in Administration ears. For that would be to confess the servility of a board designated and created by law as an independent body. And surely no friend of the Administration would care to have it said that its influence was used to rebuke an expression of opinion in a free country.

The more the incident is pondered the more difficult it is to conceive of a defensible theory for the board's unprecedented action.

with the Reserve Board and make recommendations regarding banking matters.

The group met here several weeks ago, but made no statement on adjourning. Subsequently it was rumored it had recommended immediate currency stabilization. J. J. Thomas, acting governor of the board, denied the report.

On Wednesday, however, H. E. Emmart, a Baltimore banker, acting for Howard Bruce, member of the council from this (the Richmond) district, called on Mr. Thomas and left a letter from Walter Lichtenstein, secretary of the council, transmitting the latter's statement of views.

Resolution Is Adopted.

The council made this statement public Thursday through Mr. Lichtenstein, who is a Chicago banker, and yesterday Mr. Thomas revealed that the day previously he had sent the following letter to Mr. Lichtenstein:

"I return herewith your letter of September 25, 1934, and the copy attached thereto of a statement prepared by the Federal Advisory Council. Your letter and the statement referred to were received yesterday afternoon and brought immediately to the attention of the board. Thereupon, the board adopted unanimously the following resolution:

"'Resolved, That the letter of September 25, 1934, received this afternoon by Vice Governor Thomas from Mr. Walter Lichtenstein, secretary of the Federal Advisory Council, and the copy of a statement of the Federal Advisory Council referred to therein, be returned to the secretary of the Federal Advisory Council, with the comment that the board considers the matter contained in the statement referred to does not come within the jurisdiction of the Federal Reserve Board and with the request that in this connection the attention of the Federal Advisory Council be called to the fact that the second paragraph of Section 12 of the Federal Reserve act reads as follows:

"'The Federal Advisory Council shall have power, by itself or through its officers (1) to confer directly with the Federal Reserve Board on general business conditions; (2) to make oral or written representations concerning matters within the jurisdiction of said board; (3) to call for information and to make recommendations in regard to discount rates, rediscount business, note issues, reserve conditions in the various districts, the purchase and sale of gold or securities by Reserve banks, open market operations by said banks, and the general affairs of the Reserve banking system!'

"The board requests that the attention of the Federal Advisory Council be called to the fact that there was no discussion of the subject matter of the statement by the council during its meetings with the board on September 17 and 18, 1934, and that no intimation thereof was given to the board by the council at any time prior to the receipt of your letter."

24 Stock Marts Register Under Securities Law

(Associated Press.)

The controlling hand of the Federal Government, moving before the effective date Monday of the securities act's antimanipulation provisions, reached out yesterday and embraced 24 of the Nation's stock exchanges in 18 cities.

The 24 trading marts formally were registered as "National securities exchanges" within the purview of the control law. Twelve other exchanges were granted a 60-day exemption from registration pending an examination of their positions.

With favorable reaction from Wall street to the 25 to 45 per cent margin requirements announced Thursday night by the Federal Reserve Board, Chairman Joseph P. Kennedy of the Securities Commission said yesterday that temporary regulations to govern registration of securities until permanent rules can be prepared would be ready today.

Coincident with announcement of the margin requirement, the commission decided that for an indefinite period of readjustment it would not put into effect the provision prohibiting trading in unregistered securities. Mr. Kennedy also announced that a new list of securities which have been denied registration would be issued today.

List of Exemptions.

Pending final action on permanent exemption of 12 exchanges granted stays yesterday until December 1, Mr. Kennedy said these markets would be expected to abide by the manipulative control provisions of the law which becomes operative Monday. Those exempted from registration for 60 days follow:

Boston Curb, California Stock (Los Angeles), Chicago Curb, Colorado Springs Stock, Hartford Stock, Louisville Stock, Milwaukee Grain and Stock, Minneapolis-St. Paul Stock, Richmond Stock, San Francisco Mining, Seattle Mining and Seattle Stock.

The applications for registration accepted included these exchanges:

Baltimore Stock, Boston Stock, Buffalo Stock, Chicago Board of Trade, Chicago Stock, Cincinnati Stock, Cleveland Stock, Denver Stock, Detroit Stock, Los Angeles Curb, Los Angeles Stock, New Orleans Stock, New York Curb, New York Produce, New York Real Estate Securities, New York Stock, Philadelphia Stock, Pittsburgh Stock, St. Louis Stock, Salt Lake Stock, San Francisco Curb, San Francisco Stock, Standard Stock Exchange of Spokane and the Washington (D. C.) Stock Market.

Building Trade Resists Green In Union Ouster

Stands Firm on Refusal to Readmit Delegates to Convention.

San Francisco, Sept. 28 (AP).—Defying William Green, president, and the executive council of the American Federation of Labor, the building trades department of the A. F. of L. today refused to reconsider its refusal to readmit three big international unions to membership in the division.

Green, referring to the position of the building trades body as illegal, indicated the fight to force readmission of the three unions to the building trades department would be carried to the floor of the federation convention which opens here Monday.

This, the first major break in labor's ranks assembled for what leaders said would be a crucial gathering, occurred just after Green had arrived and proclaimed the intention of the federation to point the way out of the unemployment situation.

Green went before the building trades convention in an effort to have it undo yesterday's action, by which the carpenters and joiners, the bricklayers, and the electrical workers' unions were denied representation in the department sessions.

Pleading for readmission of the three unions, which have a membership of 400,000, Green pointed out the federation's executive council had voted unanimously last June in favor of readmission. He warned the building trades their refusal was in violation of Federation rules.

A motion then was made to suspend the rules and refer the readmission question again to a committee. It was voted down.

Green, in predicting the A. F. of L. will point the way out of the country's unemployment situation, said 25,000,000 American workers were depending upon his organization to offer a remedy for unemployment "and to insist upon its being accepted and applied."

The 30-hour week, a wider distribution of industry's earnings through higher wages, the strengthening of the collective bargaining principle and other social factors will be the federation's weapons against unemployment, he said.

Green estimated the American unemployed at about 10,000,000, including about 2,000,000 working on Government projects. The other 8,000,000, he said, are without work of any kind.

Sunrise in the Suburbs

By Clyde H. DuBose.

Internal Revenue agents, it seems, are determined to show the Department of Justice that there are two Federal organizations capable of making silent, swift and sure inroads into the crime world.

Such unexpected retaliation as that dealt the bootlegging profession for the shooting of Investigator Cyrus Thomas at Forestville, Md., last Tuesday has left southern Maryland gasping.

Never before have "revenooers" been known to run so completely rough-shod over the lawless of this section. From Washington, Baltimore, and all nearby points they poured to the scene of Forestville's 800-gallon still where Thomas was shot while attempting a raid.

In less than three days there were seven men under arrest and the case was declared "practically cleared." A hitherto impregnable organization was said to be broken. A few more such demonstrations and Maryland's legitimate liquor merchants may be able to compete with those in the District of Columbia.

Fairfax County has become concerned with the Government's rehabilitation program.

And well it might. Approximately 500 white families and a number of colored families, they say, will be gathered from relief rolls of Washington or nearby cities and thrust upon its quiet and peace-loving community.

A "rehabilitation camp" will be established to support these families. There will be no strict censorship on those who enter. The community will bear the brunt if undesirables are admitted.

As a result, a committee of the local Pomona Grange has been selected to investigate the possibilities. They point out that the families have not been self-supporting and might become charges of the county after Federal relief is withdrawn.

True, the county might gain some valuable citizens. But, judging from certain complaints from metropolitan residents, they stand an equal chance of getting some not-so-valuable citizens.

The Washington-Baltimore boulevard, said to be one of the most-traveled highways in the world, continues to take its heavy toll of auto victims.

A good picture of this highway, on which Death rides almost daily, is the little settlement of Daniel's Park, near Berwyn.

Here, within two days, one person has been killed and seven injured. Little hope is held for two of the injured. Sooner or later officials will be confronted with the question, "What is the State going to do with this death trap?"

Maj. Gen. Harries Dies at 74; Brest Commander During War

tute, Western Society of Engineers and other technical groups.

The general had a military record as distinguished as that in the field of business. He began his career as a member of the Washington Light Infantry and in a short time became a major as inspector of small arms for the District National Guard on Gen. Ordway's staff. Ordway, just prior to his death, told the Secretary of War that only one member of his staff was competent to handle the National Guard and on the death of Gen. Ordway, Gen. Harries was appointed brigadier general commanding the militia, military and naval, of the District of Columbia by Presidential commission, November 30, 1897. He was promoted to major general May 18, 1915, and retired upon his own request May 26, 1915.

Served at Santiago.

He was colonel in command of the First Volunteer D. C. Infantry in 1898 and served before Santiago de Cuba during the siege of that city and in the Cuban Army of Occupation and served in various capacities in the Indian campaigns. He was a member of the War Department board on promotion of rifle practice for many years.

In 1917 he was brigadier general commanding the First Brigade, Nebraska National Guard, and was appointed brigadier general of the United States Army August 5, 1917, taking that brigade to France. He commanded successively the Fifty-ninth Depot Brigade, the 186th Infantry Brigade (Thirteenth Corps, Second French Army) and Base Section No. 5, A. E. F., 173rd Infantry Brigade. His outstanding ability as an engineer was recognized by Gen. Pershing and he was placed in command of the Port of Brest, where he performed the feat of unloading the Leviathan, with 12,800 fully armed and equipped men and their supplies, in 24½ hours, a task which had taken many days at a British port.

In recognition of his services, he was appointed chief of the U. S. Military Mission to Berlin after the armistice and thus became the first officer to enter Berlin after the war. He handled expatriation of all prisoners of war and was in Germany through the revolution. He was transferred to brigadier general, Officers Reserve Corps, in 1920, and later promoted to major general, Aux., in 1924.

Decorated for Service.

Gen. Harries was awarded the D. S. M., both Army and Navy, and was made a commander of the Legion of Honor for his work at Brest. He was decorated by eight other countries for military service.

He was National commander of the Order of Indian Wars, United States, in 1912; commander in chief of the Military Order of the World War, 1920 to 1925, when de declined renomination; vice president, 1924-25, and president, 1926-27, of the Society of the Army of Santiago de Cuba.

He married Miss Elizabeth Langley, of Washington, April 23, 1884. She died in 1925. They had two children. He married Miss Alice Loveland January 11, 1927. She survives him. One son, Lieut. Warren Goodwin Harries, was killed in France near Brest when an automobile returning him from a conference overturned. Another son, Lieut. Col. Herbert Langley Harries, U. S. A., retired; a brother, Fred L. Harries, and a sister, Miss Florence F. Harries, also survive.

He was a member of the Army and Navy Club, the National Press Club, in Washington; the Union League, Mid-Day, and the Army and Navy of Chicago, of which he was president, and the Engineers and Recess Clubs, of New York. His Washington home was at the Willard, and his other residence was in Chicago.

Inquiry Fails To Find Cause Of Liner's Fire

3-Weeks Hearing Ends; Fireproofing of Ships May Be Asked.

New York, Sept. 28 (AP).—The Morro Castle disaster inquiry of the Department of Commerce closed today after more than 100 witnesses in three weeks had disclosed minute details of the spectacular sea tragedy that cost 132 lives.

The hearings left unsolved the vital question of what started the fire that swept the luxurious liner off the New Jersey Coast September 8, but investigators determined to use the lessons they gained in making the high seas safer.

Fireproofing of all ships was indicated as a major reform which may grow out of the holocaust.

Dickerson N. Hoover, assistant director of the United States Bureau of Navigation and head of the inquiry, said inspectors would study the evidence to determine whether action should be brought to revoke the licenses of any of the ship's officers.

Recommendations for the fireproofing of vessels will be contained, he intimated, in his report to Secretary of Commerce Daniel C. Roper.

Even as the department's inquiry closed, assistant United States attorneys questioned Franklin D. Mooney, president of the Ward Line, for more than two hours as they lined up evidence for presentation to two Federal grand juries considering the case.

Hoover said he had concluded the Steamboat Inspection Service might well assume responsibility for lifeboat drills on ships—now up to the captains. He thought also that applicants for seamen's tickets should take practical examinations.

M. O. Fano, of the Ward Line, testified that any munitions shipped aboard the Morro Castle to Cuba were handled through the regular customs authorities, so that the Government rather than revolutionaries would have received them.

Hoover was interested in this, he said, to determine whether the Ward Line had incurred the enmity of any Cuban faction.

Declaring there is "bewilderment, fear and despair on every hand," the platform laid the blame at the doorstep of the Democratic Administration for its "almost complete lack of definite goals and fixed principles."

The platform condemned an "all-powerful, usurping central government, exercising arbitrary authority and direction over the economic life of the individual citizen."

Gov. Lehman's administration was assailed as "well-intentioned but weak" and termed him a "tail of the Federal kite."

Democrats in Michigan Agree on United Front

Grand Rapids, Mich., Sept. 28 (AP). What started out to be an acrimonious convention of Michigan Democrats ended tonight in a harmonious note when rival factions agreed their best interests in the coming election would be served by a united front, and unanimously renominated all incumbents seeking a place on the November ballot.

The candidates named were: for secretary of state, Guy M. Wilson, of Flint; State treasurer, Theodore I. Fry, incumbent; auditor general, John K. Stack, incumbent, and attorney general, Patrick H. O'Brien.

The threatened battle was based on the opposition of Gov. William A. Comstock to the plans of Arthur J. Lacy, who defeated the Governor for renomination in the primaries earlier in the month.

Walker Heads Democrats in Montgomery

Named Chairman of State Central Committee at Rockville Session.

Curtis Walker, of Chevy Chase, was elected chairman of the Democratic State Central Committee for Montgomery County at the organization meeting yesterday in the Rockville courthouse. CALVERT, THE WHISKEY THAT IS "PERFECTLY MARRIED"
PERFECTLY MARRIED

Here's a genial drink. Don't hurry it—for Nature didn't hurry the making of it. CALVERT is smooth and rich and flavorful; fragrant as old-time memories. It feels great going down and "warms the cockles of your heart" after it is down. And that's because CALVERT developed its sound character without hurrying.

The straight whiskey used in CALVERT was aged in charred oak casks for 5 years before being blended with choice neutral grain spirits. Then the blend—instead of being hurriedly bottled—was put right back into the same casks to unite flavors and combine fragrance until "Perfectly Married."

Finally, when its makers deemed it wholly worthy of your best consideration, it was sealed in the distinctive decanter bottle under the proud name of CALVERT—a name that for generations has meant the finest whiskey ever made in the State of Maryland.

CALVERT may sound expensive but it isn't—the price is as right as the rest of it.

G.O.P. Platform In Virginia Hits U. S. 'Meddling'

Page Declares Party Will End Interference With Industry.

Norfolk, Va., Sept. 28 (AP).—Taking as a text a quotation from Thomas Jefferson's first message to Congress, L. C. Page, of Norfolk, Republican candidate for the United States Senate opposing Harry F. Byrd, Democratic incumbent, today announced his party's campaign platform.

The platform asserts that the country "is in a state of social, economic and political confusion" and that the Republican party in the State favors certain definite policies looking to the relief of these conditions.

After outlining these policies, it asserted that until they are adopted secondary questions may be ignored, and concludes with the statement that candidates of the party for the Senate and Congress will support these principles and policies and if elected will perform the functions of their office "free from any control, executive or otherwise." It adds that they will strive at all times to protect and advance the interests of the people in accordance with sound principles and "to restore and preserve unimpaired the Constitutional system of our country."

Jefferson Quotation.

The quotation from Jefferson with which the statement is prefaced asserts that "agriculture, manufacture, commerce and navigation, the four pillars of our prosperity, are then most thriving when left most free to individual enterprise."

Developing its thesis, that the country is in a state of confusion, the platform says: "Industry is embarrassed and obstructed by the meddling interference and control of a rapidly expanding Federal bureaucracy; labor is confused as to its rights, the country is torn by strikes; unemployment is steadily increasing; uncertainty as to the future policies of the Government, as to the currency and growing inflation of both currency and credit, are paralyzing business and preventing employment of labor in the natural lines of production.

"The ever-increasing and reckless expenditures and rising public debt are endangering the public credit and causing grave apprehension on the part of all thoughtful men as to the future; the growing burden of taxation is rapidly approaching the point of confiscation of all property.

Remedies Proposed.

"Men can not plan for the future, industry can not be revived, or employment provided for labor under such conditions. It is, therefore, of vital importance that every citizen should cast his vote in the election on November 6 in accordance with his convictions as to the best interests of the country, regardless of party names or associations."

Turning to remedies the platform proposes:

Repeal of all laws conferring extraordinary or legislative powers upon the executive department.

Abolition of "all the alphabetical commissions, boards and bureaus" created within the last 18 months and exercise by the normal agencies of Government of any powers they now exercise which are necessary to the interest of the people.

Limitation of the Federal Government to its "legitimate" functions and restoration to the States of functions and responsibilities "to conform to our Constitutional system."

Immediate action to balance the National budget and reduce "reckless and wasteful expenditures" resulting in increasing taxes and public debt.

"A stable currency and sound money based upon honest principles" which will end uncertainties and open the way for industrial development and employment.

A definite policy "for the encouragement of the production of agricultural wealth and not the destruction of such wealth. . . . The farmer should be left free to conduct his own business without meddling interference."

Subject to control to prevent monopolies, the greatest possible freedom to business from law or bureaucratic interference "to the end that the production of wealth may be increased and labor may be given employment in the legitimate lines of industry."

The platform expresses belief that one of the chief sources of economic distress is confusion in relation to the transportation industry. It favors placing all agencies of public transportation engaged in interstate or foreign commerce under the same system and agency of Federal regulation and control, "with a liberal policy looking to the development and coordination of these transportation services into a National system fitted to meet the Nation's needs."

Ten Baltimore Distributors Held Milk License Violators

Others Banned From Doing Business With Group, Derrick Says.

Baltimore, Sept. 28 (AP).—Ten Baltimore milk distributors were declared to be "in violation of" their Agricultural Adjustment Administration license today by B. B. Derrick, milk administrator for this territory, who said other distributors thereby were banned from doing business with any of the ten.

Derrick said the violation on the part of most of the ten was failure to pay the producer the price for his milk the license called for. The AAA set the price to be paid the farmer, but not that to be charged the consumer.

Derrick's declaration was made in a letter to other milk distributors operating in the city. He said the ten declared in violation of the license were subject to such prosecution as the AAA might bring.

The legality of the whole milk license is challenged in a suit of the Royal Farms Dairy pending in Federal District Court here. The action was started a few months ago when Charles C. Page, representing the dairy, sought a court order restraining Federal authorities from examining the dairy's books. The papers in the case were served upon Secretary of Agriculture Wallace after detectives had determined when he would enter the State and come in the jurisdiction of the court.

Producers prices fixed in the license are from 2 to 3½ cents a gallon higher than those prevailing before the license went into effect. One group of milk distributors has accused another group of seeking special advantage for itself in not passing the increased prices to the consumer.

Westminster, Md., Sept. 28 (Spl.).—B. B. Derrick, milk market administrator of the Baltimore sales area, was the principal speaker at an "educational" meeting held here last night, attended by approximately 400 Carroll County milk shippers.

Sponsored by the Carroll County Farmer's Union, the meeting was held to furnish producers with information concerning the license for milk, effective in the Baltimore area under the Agricultural Adjustment Administration.

Mr. Petersilia stated there are at present about 50 cords of wood stored on this lot, and he intends to present the matter of removal to the city council Tuesday night.

Cannon Blames Hoover Regime For Dry Defeat

Lack of Enforcement Seen Cause Behind Repeal; Roosevelt Rapped.

Pocomoke City, Md., Sept. 28 (Spl.).—Failure of prohibition was due to lack of enforcement by the Hoover Administration, Bishop James Cannon, jr., said at a prohibition meeting tonight at the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Bishop Cannon said that repeal of prohibition was "reckless and deceitful," and presented as the main issue of the 1928 campaign instead of the real issue, which he said was the financial condition of the Nation.

He scored President Roosevelt for permitting "saloons with modifications" in Washington. Despite the fact that the Chief Executive promised that there would be no saloons, he has allowed them, the speaker said, the only conditions being that drinks must be mixed out of sight and that customers must consume them while seated.

He also declared that Washington bars have "added the evil of bar maids and the serving of liquor to women over 19."

Washington County Safety Patrols Slated

Hagerstown, Md., Sept. 28 (Spl.).—With a two-year record of not a single serious accident to school children here while school safety patrols have been operated, plans were announced today for establishing similar patrols at county schools.

A. W. Petersilia, project engineer for the VERA in Alexandria, reports that the State organization has approved two new projects, one a sanitary sewer on Lloyd avenue, between Washington and Alexandria avenues, to cost $1,263, and the other a sanitary sewer on Washington avenue, between Grove and Lloyd avenues, at a cost of $2,041.45.

Frank T. Wolfford, 45, died yesterday at his residence, 115 South Patrick street, Alexandria, after a brief illness. He is survived by his widow and four children, his parents, Mr. and Mrs. D. J. Wolfford; four sisters and four brothers. He was a member of Alexandria-Washington Lodge of Masons. Funeral arrangements have not been completed.

Funeral services for Mrs. Virginia Hardbower, who died Thursday at her home near Alexandria, will be held at 9:30 a. m. today at St. Mary's Catholic Church. Interment will be in St. Mary's Cemetery.

First Formation of Year Held at Annapolis, With 640 'Plebes.'

Annapolis, Md., Sept. 28 (Spl.).—Nearly 1,000 midshipmen of the three upper classes returned to Annapolis today from their annual vacation of a month and the Naval Academy formally entered upon the nintieth academic year with the customary ceremonies, a new superintendent and a number of changes in the academic staff, both among older and younger officers assigned as instructors in the several departments.

Rear Admiral David F. Sellers, former commander in chief of the United States Fleet, assumed the duties of superintendent following the close of the last term, succeeding Rear Admiral Thomas C. Hart, who was transferred to a sea command.

The new fourth class of "plebes," recruited during the summer months, has an enrollment of 640, making the grand total of the regiment, 1,704, a slight increase over last year. The membership of the other classes are: First or seniors, 451; second, 267; third, 381.

The regiment held its first formation, newly appointed midshipmen officers taking charge, with John N. Shaeffer, of Bedford, Pa., the regimental commander, or "striper." The battalion of fourth classmen was presented to the older midshipmen by the battalion commander, Charles D. Brown, Rhinelander, Wis., and the plebes then were distributed among the respective companies for drills and other routine work. Superintendent Sellers and several ranking officers of his staff watched the ceremony.

Academic routine is now in full swing with the exception of classes, which begin Monday.

FERA Plant Urged At Fredericksburg

Burning of Silk Mill Ends Opposition to Plan.

Fredericksburg, Va., Sept. 28 (Spl.).—Establishment of a matress factory as an FERA project to provide employment for workers of the General Textile Mills, which burned to the ground Monday, was urged by civic leaders here today.

Placing a matress factory here was discouraged several weeks ago because of the tendency of such a project to attract outside labor, there being only a small number of unemployed here at the time. With the loss of the silk mill, however, approximately 100 workers are jobless.

No plans for rebuilding the silk mills have been announced by the central office of the plant in New York. Adoption of the mattress factory plan will be withheld pending definite word from the mill owners.

Will Launches Campaign With Attack on NRA

G. O. P. Candidate Heard by Large Gathering at Mount Clifton.

Mount Clifton, Va., Sept. 28 (Spl.).—Declaring the NRA has practically nullified the Sherman antitrust law, and that it has retarded rather than helped recovery, and that it is not practicable and will not work, and deliverying searing blasts at the AAA, J. Everett Will, Republican candidate for the House of Representatives from the Seventh Virginia District, opened his campaign in this little village, the place of his birth, tonight before one of the largest political gatherings assembled in the history of Mount Clifton.

Will opposes Representative A. Willis Robertson, of Lexington, Democratic incumbent, and declares his intention of waging a vigorous campaign in an effort to unseat this district's member of the present "rubber stamp Congress."

"It is high time," he asserted, "that the American people assert their common sense and hold fast to their form of Constitutional Government before it is too late."

"There are thousands of instances," he said, "where citizens of our country have lost their right to attend to their own business as a result of the tyranny of the Blue Eagle," claiming that in the same way that the NRA has retarded business and industry the AAA has affected the farmer.

"No longer," he stated, "is the American farmer a free man. No longer is he allowed, under the penalty of criminal prosecution, to sow and reap as he chooses on his own land according to his own judgment and without interference from a bureaucrat in Washington.

"No administrsation in the history of this country," he asserted, "has failed more miserably in carrying out its pledges than has the New Deal administration with reference to economy of government, balancing the budget, or to end the increase in our public debt.

Head of School Must Appear in Bankrupt Suit

Charlottesville, Va., Sept. 28 (Spl.).—Robert S. Osborn, bankrupt headmaster of the Charlottesville School for Boys, will be required to attend meetings of his creditors in Charlottesville, it was ruled yesterday by Duncan Curry, of Staunton, referee in bankruptcy.

Osborn's attorney, George Curtis Shinn, of Washington, petitioned Mr. Curry that his client not be required to attend meetings. He appeared at a gathering of creditors yesterday in the Federal Building. About 50 creditors were present and others were represented by attorneys. Stuart Fitzhugh, Albemarle lawyer, was appointed trustee.

The referee was informed by several of the creditors that they had paid Osborn tuition fees for their children in advance, in some instances for a period of three years. Many of these payments, it was stated, were accepted by the headmaster just a few weeks before he filed his petition in bankruptcy.

Various letters received by creditors from time to time, all of which bore a Charlottesville postmark, were read at the hearing. In one of them Osborn said attendance upon the first meeting of creditors would mean the loss of his present position. In it he stated that he paid the last $80 he had to one of his attorneys and had to borrow money from his friends to pay his car fare to the scene of his new job.

Attorney Shinn declared he did not know the present whereabouts of his client. When he last saw him in Washington he had with him two boys, presumably former students of the school here.

In his bankruptcy petition Mr. Osborn listed his liabilities at $71,596.11 and assets at $16,285.

Orange County Pageant Given By Methodists

Old-Time Service Opens Final Day of Celebration.

Orange, Va., Sept. 28 (Spl.).—The Orange County Bicentennial celebration opened the last day with a meeting of the Methodist Churches of Orange at Palmyra Church, at which a pageant was given portraying the early church service in Virginia.

Dressed in pioneer costumes, a choir of 20 sang hymns, given out line by line in the old-fashioned manner. A circuit rider, symbolizing the famous preachers of the church who carried their teachings to the far parts of Virginia, dismounted at the door of the church.

Speaking before a gathering of visitors to the Orange County bicentennial, Maj. Edgar Erskine Hume, president of the Society of the Cincinnati in the State of Virginia, traced the history of the society and urged that in times such as these all those eligible for membership would be doing their patriotic duty in joining.

Having no political affiliations and having only the good of the country at heart, the organization has preserved the feeling which led to the formation of the society four years before the meeting of the convention to form the Constitution by the soldiers of the Revolution, Maj. Hume stated.

The last day of the Orange County bicentennial was concluded by an additional performance of the historical pageant showing 200 years in the history of Orange County, and a bicentennial dance.

Smith, Virginia emergency relief administrator, in his monthly report to the State relief committee at its meeting here.

"If such authorization develops, many relief cases will be taken over from relief supplied through the general relief fund and will be given employment paid for from a probable special allotment," the report said.

30,000 Watch Coronation, Parade, Contests, and Grand Ball.

By Bart Sheridan.

Manassas, Va., Sept. 28—Crowning Miss Sheila Sultan as "Regina IV, Queen of the Piedmont Dairy Festival," Gov. George C. Peery was a guest of honor at opening ceremonies of the festival here this morning. More than 30,000 persons crowded the city today to witness Miss Sultan's coronation, the festival parade, dairy judging contests and tonight's queen's ball.

Portraying in allegory the benefits to be derived from extensive consumption of milk, a pageant followed coronation ceremonies. Three hundred persons were cast in the event. The pageant comprised three episodes, "Fairyland," "Dairyland" and Playground Land." Its story, enacted largely by children, told of the development of the plan of the "fairies and brownies" to make all children healthy by giving them plenty of "fresh air and milk, as Nature's plan."

Awards in the festival parade went to floats of Loudoun County as the most artistic entrant; the Prince William 4-H Club as the most appropriate, and the Alexandria Dairy Products Co. as the best commercial entrant. Loudoun's entry was a representation of a huge milk bottle filling a glass for the consumption of six girls. The award for the most appropriate float, given to the Prince William 4-H Club, was won by a float entitled "Health Artillery." This entry was an imitation milk bottle mounted in the shape of a cannon. The Alexandria Dairy Products float, winner in the commercial class, was a huge bottle of milk surrounded by colorfully-costumed girls.

Culpeper Wins Fire Prize.

The Culpeper Fire Department won the prize as the best-appearing fire company, with units of Washington and Leesburg drawing second and third places. The Manassas High School took first place as the best school unit, followed by Occoquan and Alexandria High Schools.

Daniel McBee, of Warrenton, took the grand prize in the stock judging contest held as a joint 4-H club and Future Farmers of America exhibition. Following McBee, an F. F. A. representative, were Moffet Ashby, Warrenton, F. F. A., second prize; Egbert Thompson, Woodbridge, 4-H, third prize; Willard Saey, Upperville, F. F. A., fourth prize, and Haley Smith, Herndon, Va., F. F. A., fifth prize.

In a special exhibit of Jersey cattle, Clifford Baer, Nokesville; Moffet Ashby, Warrenton, and Cameron Cowne, Warrenton, were awarded first, second, and third places. These boys are members of the Future Farmers of America.

The Vienna (Va.) Fire Company won the two firemen's contests in hook-up and hose-laying procedure.

Ceremonies preceding the coronation of Miss Sultan were begun by a ballet, directed by Marion D. Venable, and selections by the glee club of the Fredericksburg State Teachers College.

Coronation rites began when little Jean Melnick, designated as royal crown bearer, descended the steps of the stage erected on the Portner estate at Annaburg and held the crest before Gov. Peery. The queen, clad in a flowing white gown, was escorted by her court of princesses to the Governor's side. After taking the oath of office, as read by Master of Ceremonies Noel Gill, Miss Sultan knelt before the Governor and received the emblem of her reign.

Gov. Peery, commenting on the Civil War history of Manassas, declared: "We are here not to dwell upon this splendid history, but to pay due tribute to love and beauty. In the name of the State of Virginia and Prince William County, I crown you Queen Regina IV, ruler of the Piedmont Virginia Dairy Festival."

Flanked on either side by a line of United States Marines, Miss Sultan and her 15 princesses moved off the stage and passed under the Marines' crossed sabers to her throne opposite the stage platform.

Defendant's Bear May Cost $6,000 —In Damage Suit

Luray, Va., Sept. 28 (Spl.).—One of the most novel damage suits that has ever come before the Page county court is that of John C. Nichols, 30, a truck driver of Luray district, who is suing J. Allen Washington, of Washington and Luray, for $6,000 for damages that Nichols claims were inflicted by one of two bears kept by Williams at Panorama, a summer resort on top of the Blue Ridge, seven miles East of Luray.

Nichols was taking a look at the two bears when, he alleges, one of the animals thrust his paw through the meshes of his cage and clawed him. Nichols says that he has been put to considerable cost and that he will be disfigured for life.

The trial is being attended by hundreds of persons.

Ritchie Opens Tobacco Fete Before 10,000

Governor Urges Training in Statecraft as Well as in Business.

La Plata, Md., Sept. 28 (Spl.).—Citing the need for professional training in statesmanship as well as in business or other walks of life, Gov. Albert C. Ritchie opened the Charles County Tobacco Festival here today before a crowd of 10,000 persons.

Gov. Ritchie crowned Miss Lenora Garner, of Spring Hill, Md., as "Queen Victoria." Tomorrow's ceremonies will be inaugurated by Harry Nice, Republican candidate for Governor. After her coronation, Miss Garner and her court witnessed a pageant entitled "The Redemptioner," directed by Cathleen Read Coontz, of Washington.

Among other guests at the ceremonies were Herbert O'Conor, Democratic candidate for attorney general, and George F. Radcliffe, Democratic candidate for the United States Senate. Princesses attending "ueen Victoria" were Miss Jean Price, Mechanicsville, representing St. Mary's County; Miss Mary Alice Wigley, Anne Arundel County; Miss Genevieve Anderson, Calvert County, and Miss Mary Lee Duvall, Prince Georges County.

Lauds Southern Maryland.

Gov. Ritchie lauded the part that southern Maryland has played in making the history of the Nation and the State. Declaring that he would refrain from making a political speech, the Governor referred only briefly to the present gubernatorial contest in refuting criticism of his opponents that he had an "organization."

"No business could operate without being "organized," he said. "Statesmanship should be as much a life's work as any other business or profession," he added.

He said he would stand on his record as Governor, and sought the support of the people on his past performances in office. He declared that the State budget would "stand for itself."

The pageant was an early Colonial romance. Outstanding in the presentation was a portrayal of a solemn Indian ceremonial, based on the life of the Indians who dwelt at the old village of Port Tobacco in Charles County, 2 miles west of here on Port Tobacco Rock. The event concluded with a Negro episode of life in the tobacco fields.

Maryland Lifer's Return Is Asked

Illinois Parole Requested for Escaped Prisoner.

Baltimore, Sept. 28 (AP).—State's Attorney Herbert R. O'Conor, of Baltimore, was informed yesterday that Gov. Horner of Illinois has been asked to parole Jack Hart from the Joliet prison so Hart may resume a life sentence in Maryland on a murder case.

State's Attorney T. J. Courtney, of Cook County, Ill., wrote O'Conor that he had requested the Governor to parole the prisoner, known in Illinois as James (Reds) Kelly.

O'Conor had written Courtney about Hart, who escaped from the Maryland Penitentiary and was first heard from when he was arrested at Cicero, Ill., for a shooting and received a 1 to 14 year sentence under the name of Kelly. Hart has served approximately a year at Joliet and is eligible for a parole under the Illinois law.

NRA a Historic Deed, Declares Jesuit Leader

Intervened at Crucial Moment, Says Rev. Edmund A. Walsh.

The phase on which NRA now enters must be one of popular education, not of futile force or vulgar menace, the Rev. Edmund A. Walsh, S. J., vice president of Georgetown University, told a radio audience last night.

It has succeeded to a very important extent in its main and immediate purpose, Father Walsh said, "but I am equally persuaded that it has failed in certain other directions.

"By that I mean that it has performed a truly historic function in the form of the definite psychological stimulus it gave to public confidence at the moment last year when demoralization and mounting indecision threatened to pass into universal despair.

Could Have Meant End.

"That would have been zero hour in our National history and might well have marked the beginning of the end of democracy in the United States.

"There was simply no other place to go save in the general direction of the National recovery contemplated by the act. We had reached the bottom point of moral exhaustion and economic breakdown.

"It must be conceded by every fair observer that the NRA did arrest that collapse and started America along a new road with an awkward consciousness of ultimate victory and with supreme, well-merited confidence in the President. To that extent, therefore, the past year was a signal triumph for the New Deal, and no amount of criticil sniping can put back the clock of time and cancel out that historic fact."

Urges Public Support.

Father Walsh urged that the momentum achieved by the NRA be continued. "Government alone can not accomplish this colossal task," he said, "but only a concerted, voluntary and sincere cooperation between capital, labor and the buying public.

"To achieve that unity is our clear duty as citizens as well as to our interest as private individuals."

Youth Goes Back To Indiana Scene Of Girl's Murder

Memphis, Tenn., Sept. 28 (AP).—Handcuffed, but smiling, Marvin Day, alias Marvin O'Day, rode back to his Indiana home tonight to the scene of the brutal attack and slaying to which officers say he has confessed.

Day, who says he is 16, but is described by police as possibly 20 or older, was placed in an automobile shortly before noon today for the drive back to South Bend, where 8-year-old Marverine Appel was slain four years ago last August.

Day was arrested at a rooming house here two days ago on word from Jefferson City, Mo., police that he had told a fellow transient at Jefferson City recently that he was wanted at South Bend for the killing of a girl.

The crime apparently had been solved shortly after its commission by the confession of a man of 40, who was later held mentally incompetent and committed to the Indiana prison until he was mentally fit to stand trial.

Lindbergh Case Data Fills 103 Volumes

New York, Sept. 28 (U.P.).—The Department of Justice data in the Lindbergh kidnaping case fills 103 volumes made of onion-skin paper and kept in a Lexington avenue safe, it was learned tonight.

The thoroughness with which every angle is traced is illustrated by the fact that when the name of "J. J. Faulkner" was mentioned vaguely in the case, complete records of every Faulkner who has lived in the city since 1875 were assembled.

Oil Board Halts Gas Purchases

Committee Feels Bulk of Surplus Has Been Absorbed.

The planning and coordination committee of the petroleum industry announced last night it has suspended its "distress" gasoline purchase program.

The purchases are to be suspended pending action on the part of enforcement agencies in stopping shipments of gasoline produced from illegal crude oil.

All contracts which have already been entered into, the committee announced, will be carried through and the force of inspectors will continue their duties.

In announcing the suspension of purchases, the committee said that it believed its activities to date have had a "definitely constructive effect and that the major bulk of distress gasoline from other sources than east Texas has been absorbed."

"It is hoped," the committee said, "that the Government enforcement agencies will soon demonstrate that they can successfully cope with the 'hot oil' situation. Thereupon the committee can promptly renew its activities."

9-Year Mystery Killing Solved in Minnesota

St. Paul, Sept. 28 (AP).—A 9-year-old mystery—the murder of Frank Micka, 70, business man of Hutchinson, Minn.—was solved today, officials announced, with the arrest of Albert Tupa, Willow River tenant farmer.

Melvin Passolt, State crime bureau chief, said John Johnson, also of Willow River, had signed a confession implicating Tupa in the robbery and slaying of Micka. Passolt said Tupa made a verbal confession.

Constructive Response.

Virtual acceptance of the Winant Board report by the Cotton Textile Code Authority further emphasizes the constructive character of that document. As a result of the board's efforts the grave issues which gave rise to the textile strike become the subject of study, investigation and negotiation, rather than the cause of violence and propagandized antagonisms. The nature of these problems has not changed, but the tactful mediation of the Winant Board has revolutionized the approach of both sides toward a solution.

The operators' agreement not to "pursue a policy of resentment" is likewise a tribute to the persuasive influence of George A. Sloan, president of the Cotton Textile Institute. The Winant report produced varying reactions among the mill owners. Some were disposed to cooperate; others quite the contrary. There was danger of prolonged guerrilla warfare at individual mills. To bring out of this situation assurance of cooperation by the industry as a whole, on the basis of the Winant Board report, is an achievement of no mean proportions.

With Mr. Sloan's announcement, the strike becomes a closed chapter. But intricate problems remain to be solved, including the reinstatement of strikers in their former jobs.

The Winant Board requested employers to "take back the workers now on strike without discrimination." The code authority recommends merely "that as work becomes available, workers who did not engage in lawless violence be re-employed." Prejudice against employes known to have participated in riots and destruction of property is natural. On the other hand, it is easy to make use of such accusation against employes who merely exercised their lawful right to strike. Charges of widespread discrimination against strikers in the reopening of the mills have been filed with the new Textile Labor Relations Board.

Settlement of this controversy will tax the ingenuity of the new board. There is reason to anticipate, however, that its activities will be conducted in the spirit of uncompromising fairness and shrewd common sense which actuated the Winant Board. If so, an amicable solution should not be so difficult. In fact, machinery for a complete adjustment of differences between the mill operators and their employes has been designed, and only a cooperative attitude on both sides seems essential to its successful establishment.

Statutory Advice.

The Federal Advisory Council is not one of those hastily-organized bodies formed during an emergency to offer suggestions or outline plans to facilitate business recovery. It is a statutory body, established under the Federal Reserve Act, which meets at least four times a year in Washington to discuss a wide variety of subjects on which it may make recommendations to the Federal Reserve Board.

The council members are selected by the directors of the 12 Federal Reserve Banks—one from each district. They are, therefore, especially qualified to express the views of bankers in all parts of the country regarding the financial policies that are being pursued.

For that reason and also because the council is an integral part of the Federal Reserve System, its formal statement, agreed to at the meeting held in Washington a few days ago, is highly significant. A large number of private organizations and banking groups have declared, as does the council, that a return to the gold standard must precede recovery, and have called for budget balancing, reductions in Government outlays, and avoidance of inflation.

The views of these other agencies, however, are nonofficial, whereas the council is empowered under the law to confer with the Federal Reserve Board on general business conditions and make recommendations in regard to the general affairs of the Reserve System. Although its advice is offered to the Reserve Board in somewhat irregular form the Treasury can hardly fail to take notice of the council's assertion that "no real or permanent recovery can be had * * * until the country has been placed upon a sound financial basis."

The League Looks Eastwards.

As its president remarked at the adjournment of the annual Assembly of the League of Nations, little that is tangible was accomplished at this session in the way of settling world problems. The outstanding achievement, of course, was the admission of the Soviet Union, with all that this step implies. Along with entry of Russia, however, should be noted the admission of Afghanistan and the election of Turkey to a seat on the League Council.

Each of these three countries is in large part interested in Asiatic stability. The League has often been criticized as being primarily a European aggregation. That charge is now lessened by these happenings, which go far to offset the loss of prestige resulting from the resignation of Japan.

As the chief delegate of India, in his closing speech, observed, the League has in the past tended to be too occidental, "too representative of one race and one creed." In the present tendency towards closer regional cooperation the development of a comprehensive Asiatic bloc of League members is significant.

The Heart Of The Problem.

The chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has announced plans for the stimulation of mortgage lending. His proposal addresses itself to the heart of the recovery problem. For the greatest concentration of unemployment is found in what are called the durable-goods industries.

Mortgage lending has long been one of the main sources of financing construction activities, revival of which would go far toward breaking the jam which at present impedes recovery. From the excessive and careless lending spree of the 'twenties, generated by overconfidence, with speculative building and financing activity, there has been an extreme reaction to under-lending and consequent under-building. The results for construction activities and employment have been cumulatively disastrous.

In addition to mortgage lending, as repeatedly stated in these columns, long-time security issues have in the past provided funds for financing the durable-goods industries. The obvious lesson is that a revival of securities issues, as well as mortgage lending, is appropriate and necessary if construction activities are now to be restored.

One of the chief obstacles to mortgage lending at the present time, of course, is currency uncertainty. Mortgage lenders put out their money with more confidence and more liberally when they have reasonable certainty as to the kind of dollar they will get back at maturity.

Of late mortgage lending has been hampered further by excessive desire for liquidity on the part of institutions that formerly did not consider this factor so much as the soundness of their investments in the long run. Among such institutions are the savings banks and life insurance companies. During the past few years these have had an experience which has brought home to them a need for liquidity never previously experienced.

Wholesale borrowing on insurance policies and runs on savings banks may be considered, at least for the present, as unlikely of recurrence. But sometimes management learns more from an experience after the event than wise precaution would have indicated as advisable before the event. It is human nature to put a double padlock on the door after the horse has been stolen. Insurance and savings bank executives are no exception to the strength of this tendency.

Mr. Jesse Jones is preparing to use the powers and resources of the RFC to restore to normal activity those institutions which have heretofore been regarded as the proper agencies for mortgage lending. There is much promise in this policy. And there can be no doubt that if it were possible for the Administration to reassure people on the subject of the gold value of the dollar, in a way that would be convincing, the prospects of this new endeavor would be greatly strengthened.

The Alley Authority.

Delay in the appointment of the District's Alley-Dwelling Authority has caused no little anxiety among civic leaders who are sponsoring this important project. The work to be undertaken by this agency has a broad social as well as economic significance. By raising the standard of living among the dwellers in miserable alleys it is striking a blow at disease, immorality and crime. The fact that men will be given work wrecking these hovels and building new low-cost housing units is sufficient reason for dispatch in getting the work under way. But that factor is secondary to the urgent need for cleaning up Washington's inhabited alleys.

President Roosevelt did well to seek the advice of a special committee in making these appointments. Having taken that course, however, it was hoped that he would act immediately upon the committee's recommendations. Nearly two months have elapsed since the committee's report reached the White House.

Indications that these appointments will be made in the near future are welcome news. If Secretary Ickes is really interested in stimulating employment in Washington through public works, it might be more effective to bring this matter to the President's attention than to criticize local officials for failure to go ahead with plans for the sewage disposal plant before funds are available.

Better Late Than Never.

"The primary responsibility for community needs rests upon the community itself."

These words were the gist of President Roosevelt's brief address yesterday to leaders in the Community Chest movement gathered at the White House. They are significant because they emphasize a fundamental if neglected aspect of the distressing problem of relief.

As the President outlined the problem, it begins first in the smaller community. When these initial resources are no longer sufficient to take care of the needy it becomes a duty of the State to supplement community expenditures. And when the State no longer can cope with the situation, Federal aid must be given. It is only then that "the Federal Government has any duty to add its resources to the common cause."

Officials of the Federal Emergency Relief Administration should be the first to give heed to the President's address. One of the most obvious objections to the policy followed by the agency is that it tends to discourage local efforts toward recovery. In some sections, notably the South, the prevalence of Federal relief funds keeps men and women away from jobs they might otherwise fill. Low wages are scorned for the ease of life on the dole.

Not only does FERA compete with agriculture and industry for labor, but far too often the Federal doles are independent of any definite employment machinery, which must be a primary part of all efficient relief systems. This is coupled with the present lack of organization whereby, in the long route from Washington to the community, some of the money intended for the unemployment fails, through the influence of politicians and downright graft, to reach its objective.

While the President is keenly aware of the need for relief of the unemployed, he is not oblivious to chiselers. He would not toss the entire burden of relief back in the laps of the municipalities whence the Federal Government so chivalrously borrowed it. But he shows a realistic understanding of the eagerness of local communities to let Washington do more than its share. It is encouraging to have the Chief Executive emphasize the responsibility of cities and States, especially as it may signify the beginning of a more efficient, as well as a more economical, relief system.

The First Step.

The conviction that the NRA is to become a permanent part of the regulatory machinery of Government has become so firmly fixed in the public mind that there is danger of forgetting that the reorganized NRA is itself an emergency agency, with a mandate which runs only until next June.

Before that time Congress will be called upon to determine whether the NRA is to continue in existence and, if so, what is to be its character and scope. The intelligence and effectiveness with which the newly appointed officials discharge the duties that have devolved upon them during this interim period will undoubtedly have a great influence upon the type of regulatory legislation finally approved. It is, therefore, with the future more than the immediate present in mind that critics should observe the functioning of the revamped organization.

If there should be a conflict of views between the Industrial Recovery Board, charged with administration of the law, and the policy committee, composed of Cabinet members and heads of emergency organizations, the segregation of functions might prove disastrous. There is a possibility of such a development, if the committee should define policies so strictly and in such detail as to hamper the work of the executive branch of the NRA. However, judging from past experience with inter-departmental boards serving in an advisory capacity, it seems more than probable that the policy-making group will play a relatively minor role. Moreover, authority has been so centralized in the hands of the able director of the committee, Donald R. Richberg, that a stalemate is unlikely to occur.

Even if the policy committee remains in the background, as surmised, its existence nevertheless provides safeguards against arbitrary exercise of power by executive decree. However, the personnel of the new Industrial Recovery Board virtually guarantees that its actions will not be either hasty or empirical, since the appointees are already familiar with the problems that the NRA is called upon to meet. Their duties will require the exercise of judgment in following the day-to-day routine, so that they will inevitably influence and shape policies, even if they are not directly responsible for the formulation of guiding principles.

Hopes entertained by business men that representatives of industry would take the place of Government officials and academic advisers in the reorganized NRA have been disappointed, but it is too soon to pass judgment upon the outcome of the initial efforts to remodel the NRA. Much will depend upon the extent to which Mr. Richberg attempts to dominate the agencies set up under the new plan, as well as upon the attitude of the group that is charged with execution of the law.

The necessity for further decentralization of the unwieldy organization which they have been called upon to manage must be evident to those in charge. The months ahead will, it is to be hoped, enable the new administrators to perfect plans for that work of reorganization which is as yet only in its initial stages.

Mr. Beck's Resignation.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: There could hardly be a more fitting ending of Mr. James Beck's seat in the House of Representatives than his resignation. I respect Mr. Beck's sincere devotion to what students call a strict interpretation of the Constitution. But I have never been able to square this devotion with the method by which Mr. Beck was nominated, elected and took his seat in the House of Representatives on December 5, 1927.

Mr. Garrett, a member from Tennessee, offered a privileged resolution stating that Mr. Beck should not be sworn in nor entitled to the privileges of the floor because the prima facie, as well as final, right of Mr. Beck to be sworn in was in question. This resolution was voted down and Mr. Beck was allowed to be sworn in by a large (Republican) majority. Another resolution was passed empowering the Committee on Elections No. 2 to report on the claim made on the responsibility of a member of the House that Mr. Beck was ineligible to a seat in the House because he was not at the time of his election an inhabitant of the State of Pennsylvania in the sense of the provision of the Constitution.

The minority opinion in the final report (H. Rept. 975, 70th Congress, 1st Sess.) concluded that Mr. Beck, even though he were a legal voter of Pennsylvania at the time of his election (which it ably refuted), was not an inhabitant of Pennsylvania in the meaning of the Constitution. But the majority opinion, which concluded that Mr. Beck was an inhabitant in the meaning of the Constitution and consequently entitled to retain his seat, was the substance of a resolution that was passed by the House without even a roll call.

A careful study of the conclusion of the minority shows that, if words mean anything, its findings as to the intent and meaning of the term, inhabitancy, as debated and understood by the framers of the Constitution, were correct. The minority conclusion was a logical and strict interpretation of the particular provision of the Constitution. So this astute lawyer and able defender of the Constitution has aided in the very "erosion of the Constitution."

Another interesting question about Mr. Beck's resignation is Where could he more effectively fight against the abuses which he claims to exist in the House of Representatives than on the floor of that House itself? AMBROSE JULIAN FAHY.

"No Doubt."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Had I been an architect, I should have wished I might have been the one who designed the Lincoln Memorial.

Had I been an artist, there are four or five canvasses in the Corcoran Gallery of Art that I, for my own satisfaction, should like to have painted.

Had I been a street paver, perhaps I should have wished to have done the surface of broad and smooth Constitution avenue.

But as a good many of my years were devoted to the work of writing news, sports and feature articles, anonymously, in various large cities, I would say, in commendation in that field of work I better understand, that I wish I might have written the ringside story of the Ross-Loughran fight that was signed by Shirley Povich, and many of the constructive sociological articles signed by Mary Haworth.

But, by the same measure, I should not wish to have written the report of the polo match signed by Vosburgh and referring to "a brilliant audience of 10,000," because I like to recall the origin and background of words in our language and that the Latin audire means to hear, and from it we derive audience as an assemblage primarily to hear, while the Latin spectare means to look at, and from it we derive the word spectators.

Nor do I covet the authorship of some of the informative articles signed by Clapper when they contain split infinitives and the obviously nullifying construction "there is no doubt but that" Roosevelt is President.

Policy Loans.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Our Government is doing everything possible to bring about a general recovery to this country, but to accomplish this the cooperation of industrialists, bankers and life insurance companies is necessary.

Under the present conditions banks and insurance companies should grant loans with interest not higher than 4 per cent, providing fairly good security is given, and in this way the lenders and the borrowers could increase their profits; the banks and insurance companies could invest the millions of money laying idle in their vaults and the merchant or trader could have a chance to develop his business. However, nothing of the kind exists. Suppose you have a policy of life insurance on which you have paid several premiums and said policy represents a cash value of $1,000. Well, you need money and apply to your insurance company for a loan of say, $500. Yes, they grant you the loan, provided you sign a note and give your policy as security, charging you an interest of 6 per cent per annum.

Can it be possible that on your own money they make you pay such high interest? Is it not usury, when there is no other security than your own money? Even the Government bonds are not so high a security as the money you have deposited with your lender. A charge of 3 per cent to 4 per cent would be more equitable, and in this way business would receive more encouraging cooperation. POLICYHOLDER.

Within and Without.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: After looking over the list of candidates that have been nominated by both parties in the primary elections for Congress in several States, I am of the opinion that we are in for six or eight more years of blunders that will drive the country to National suicide.

In fact, if I were suddenly elevated to the power of absolute dictator of America, my first act would me to disenfranchise 90 per cent of the people, because it seems that, in spite of the lessons learned in the past, they will continue to clutter up the halls of their State and National Legislatures with clowns and egomaniacs, and unless they change their haphazard way of voting for anything that runs loose, we need not be surprised to see the United States destroyed in the near future by enemies without, unwittingly aided by imbecile statesmen within. Capital's "Strike."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Eleven billions of dollars is lying idle in America today, we are told. Twenty per cent of the National income is now derived from Government sources, as compared with 8 per cent 5 years ago. "A Strike of Capital," is the cry of the alarmists. Is it? Is it not rather another proof of the alertness of capitalists, and the shortsightedness of the ordinary citizen and the idealists?

Suppose our so-called "striking" capitalists were to invest one of the billions in wheat or cotton-growing, in hog-raising or coppermining, could such action be described otherwise than as temporary insanity? Yet the same is true, in a minor degree, of every other branch of industry. Is there any commodity that could not be produced hugely in excess of "demand" by the existing plants and equipment? What sense would there be, then, in multiplying them? Without a revolutionary rearrangement of incomes, how can the "market" for necessaries or personal comforts be indefinitely expanded?

Of all the goods private enterprise provides for us, we have too much, at least potentially. But what about the public luxuries or "services" that public enterprise supplies? A shortage, verging on a famine. The "market" for the goods which private enterprise properly and efficiently supplies is glutted. The "market" for the "services" which public enterprise alone can provide is ill-supplied and is almost illimitable. Private enterprise must be not supplanted, but permanently supplemented, by public enterprise. And in the process, by the way, the home market for goods will be simultaneously expanded to its utmost magnitude. Is not this the logical solution, and the one indicated by all the facts?

STUDENT.

Alert Mr. Lyle.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In view of the tremendous amount of laudation the newspapers have heaped on that modest and self-effacing man, Mr. J. Edgar Hoover, chief of the division of investigation of the Department of Justice, suppose we get down to cases and ascertain just what Mr. Hoover or any of his men did in the matter of the apprehension of Bruno Hauptmann.

All over Washington fair-minded men are asking these questions: (1) Did anyone—except Walter Lyle, the very alert attendant at the gas-filling station, and his partner—have the least part in actually uncovering Hauptmann as the passer of one of the Lindbergh ransom notes? (2) But for the extraordinary cleverness and quick action on the part of Lyle, is it not entirely reasonable to conclude that Hauptmann might still be at large, with a possibility of never being apprehended?

There is no disposition to rob anyone of credit legitimately due. But why all this frenzied acclaim of officials who came in after the big job had been done?

EDWIN B. SMITH.

Cooperation.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: There are millions of people unemployed at this time throughout the country. What are we doing to help the Government to help them? To give us work is costing the Government millions of dollars. Now why can't we help a little?

If all who are employed would agree to have 5 per cent of our wages go back each pay day to help the Government with its great task of meeting our needs the Government would be saved millions of dollars. I don't think that honest people out of work would object to this when the Government is trying to help them.

Backyard Drug.

Postoffice, Saturday.

ARE you smoking much hashish these days? Lots of people are.

You thought it was a "dangerous drug," ranking with morphia and cocaine, and consequently forbidden? Well, it is indeed a dangerous drug that "maddens the senses and emaciates the body;" but as far as Federal legislation goes—and much State legislation—it isn't forbidden. Somehow or other, it was omitted from the Harrison Act, while the States——

But we'll talk about them in a minute.

The abuse of the weed—it has few uses save in corn-plasters, certain dyeing processes and as a substitute for linseed oil—is raging up and down these United States. Nor is the District of Columbia exempt.

Very infrequently can even this capable column beat The Post's vigilant news services. Yet here's a hashish beat:

The other day the Narcotics Bureau of the United States Treasury—probably the ablest agency of its kind conducted by any government—got a tip from Denver that a drug peddler had just left there for St. Louis "with a trunkful of dope." The Bureau's St. Louis "operatives" were told to "get" the fellow—and got him, and his trunk, when the two came off the train.

"But you guys can't do nothin'," the peddler protested; "this here's just muggles."

He was nearly right, too. Hashish was all he had. Against its possession there was neither National nor State law. The utmost those "guys" could do was to secure his arrest under an ancient city ordinance which banned the carrying of poison without a license. The punishment? A mere $20 fine.

Hashish is made from Indian hemp, which is far from being confined to India. It has more aliases than any other drug. Botanically, it is Cannabis Indica, Cannabis Sativa, Cannabis Mexicana, Cannabis Americana. In India it is bhang, chang and ganja; in Iraq, South Africa, Sierra Leone, Somaliland, Australia and the Near East it is, respectively, charas, dagga, djamba, katta edulis, esur and datra, and in the U. S. A. it is marihuana, loco weed, reefer, mooter and muggles. It "grows wild in almost every State." A while ago a luxuriant patch was discovered in the grounds of the Colorado Boys Reformatory, where nobody had dreamed of its pernicious character—except the boys.

The flowering top is the damage-maker, chewed or smoked in cigarette form, and "the female of the species is more deadly than the male." What she will do to you depends on your idiosyncrasies. Some she will stimulate, some depress. To many she brings homicidal mania: not long ago a boy smoked his first marihuana cigarette in a Florida school grounds—these cigarettes are frequently peddled in school neighborhoods—and went home and killed the only six members of his family of whom he could get hold. To nearly all users the drug extends time and distance: there are frequent cases of muggles-smoking automobile drivers who think they are a mile from a cliff or a red light—until the accident happens.

Eugene Stanley, district attorney of New Orleans, made a study of the habit as a developer of criminals. He writes:

"The underworld has been quick to realize the value of this drug in subjugating the will . . . Its use sweeps away all restraint."

Philadelphia and Pittsburgh authorities have said the same thing lately. It has been said in Maryland. Complaints come from New Mexico and the West, New York and the North.

According to one dryly condemnatory Federal report, "the drug is used . . . by the younger element in some of the larger cities, especially by high school youths . . . (It) is most commonly used in the form of cigarettes, selling generally from 15 to 25 cents each, or from three for 25 cents to three for 50 cents; but it is also mixed with beer or other alcoholic beverages for its stimulating purposes."

* * *

Yet only 13 States have legislation controlling the growth of marihuana. Only 31 control production:

Alabama	Montana
Arizona	Nebraska
Arkansas	Nevada
California	New Jersey
Colorado	New York
Florida	North Dakota
Idaho	Ohio
Illinois	Oklahoma
Indiana	Oregon
Iowa	Pennsylvania
Kansas	Rhode Island
Louisiana	Texas
Maine	Utah
Michigan	Washington
Mississippi	Wisconsin
	Wyoming

All these also have State laws to control the sale, and Massachusetts, New Mexico and Vermont also have sales-control laws, but no production-control.

"Moreover," Commissioner Anslinger told us the other day, "these States' laws aren't uniform, and now and again there will be a city ordinance—sometimes a very effective ordinance—in the chief city of a State which, in this respect, is lawless. The confusion is unbelievable—until you try to rationalize it."

"And what," we ventured, "is the cure?"

The Commissioner's answer wasn't delayed. "The confusion among the States' narcotic laws is today one of the greatest aids of the illicit traffic in every dangerous drug. It clogs all the machinery of detection, impedes all the processes of prevention and punishment. Put a uniform State Narcotics Act through every Legislature. That will not only cure the worst of the hashish evil; it will help to reduce the whole drug evil to a minimum."

Along the Potomac

With

Carlisle Bargeron

Its Majesty—the Supreme Court.

GENERAL JOHNSON'S reference—in what now turns out to have been that swan song of his—to conferences with Supreme Court Justice Brandeis seems to be agitating the Administration explainers no end. Just why is not readily apparent to the naked eye. The reference didn't shock us Tories. As a matter of fact, it hardly registered. Certainly none of us threw up our hands and exclaimed, "Shocking, shocking, if true."

BARGERON.

The Administration explainers are apparently so shocked, however, that they quit explaining. It is a safe bet that the justice wishes they would shut up.

* * * *

Their explanation is that the justice only saw the general a few times and always at the latter's request; that he could not have agreed with the general about the course he was pursuing because his well-known economic philosophy is opposed to the NRA, and that furthermore he told the general on one occasion that the only thing for him to do was to resign.

What the explainers are doing, of course, is emphasizing that the justice and the general did confer on a matter expected at some time to come before him for judicial opinion. There is probably a no more respected man in the country than Justice Brandeis, so I am sure the explainers must be just about as embarrassing as the general's reference was in the first place.

* * * *

And what I should like to ask is, Why the perturbation among the Administration apologists? We Tories were not shocked in the least. There may have been a time when we were young and innocent when we would have thought this a most unseemly piece a business. We used to think that the members of the Supreme Court lived off by themselves and never talked to anybody—that they had no friends. The late Chief Justice Taft used to refer wittingly to his cloistered life on the bench, though even as he made those witty references he would be visiting Mr. Hoover. And, of course, the cloistered Justice Stone used to play handball with Mr. Hoover nearly every day. The conversation must not at all times have been confined to their respective skills.

But it was the loose-tongued element in the New Deal that destroyed our illusion.

* * * *

When they came in they boasted about plans of stacking the court by adding two more members in order to make sure that their New Deal stuff was upheld. I do not mean that Mr. Roosevelt did, but the very talkative, boisterous elements around him did. And Mr. Roosevelt in his inaugural speech delivered what many considered an ultimatum to the court that it had better play ball.

Why, then, the agitation about Justice Brandeis having conferred with the general, and efforts to explain it away? Surely they aren't trying to get us back to the old illusions that made for orderliness. We are thoroughly disorderly now and insist on remaining that way.

It is nothing but idle speculation, but is it possible that the realization that the NRA is in conflict with the justice's heretofore expressed economic philosophy has suddenly come to worry the New Dealers and that they want to create a situation whereby he can't sit in the case?

It was the Senate Progressives and Democrats who first raised the contention that a man couldn't divorce his economic thinking and environment from his judicial decisions. That was the basis of their fight on Chief Justice Hughes.

Senator Norris used to get blue in the face insisting that it couldn't be done. It was only the Tories who insisted it could.

Rail Problem Acute; Water Trade a Factor

New Department of Transportation Under Consideration; RFC Chairman Advises Loans to Roads.

By a Special Correspondent of The Post.

THERE is continuing evidence of a growing appreciation of the National implications of the railroad problem. The creation of a new Department of Transportation, headed by a Cabinet member, has been suggested. Mr. Jones, chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, has stated that we can not get along without the railroads and that loans to them will serve a good purpose with little or no loss. He also indicated his belief in the necessity for a single regulatory control of all principal transportation services.

The railroads themselves are active. Two existing associations have been consolidated to form the Association of American Railroads, which, in the words of its newly elected head, J. J. Pelley, of the New Haven, is to act in the capacity of a general staff for the roads as a whole.

Federal Coordinator Joseph B. Eastman hails the formation of this new association as "a step in the right direction, which offers promise of a substantial benefit to the railroads and also to the country." Speaking last Friday at Cleveland before the National Association of Motorbus Operators, he stated: "What we all want is a National transportation system in which each agency will play the part which it ought to play and give to the Nation the best opportunity of quick, convenient, safe and cheap interchange and movement of commodities and people."

The gravity of the problem is apparent to all, but the difficulties involved in the extension and consolidation of Federal regulation to cover all forms of transportation become increasingly evident as the problem is studied.

With respect to the truck and the bus, we are dealing with new transportation agencies serving distinctive fields in increasing numbers. Some of these vehicles are common carriers and others are in private operation. The privately owned automible, which apparently is not subject to regulation as a transportation agency, is a factor even more important than the bus in passenger travel. The continued extension of hard-surfaced highways and the improvement of feeder roads automatically extends the economic competitive areas of the truck, bus and privately owned car. The airplane is a new transportation agency still under development and its competitive transportation economics are yet to be fully measured.

Barge Lines New Factor.

ANOTHER form of competitive transportation agency, however, presents a much simpler approach, consisting, as it does, of barge lines operated partly by private interest but largely by the Government itself, and on waterways improved, developed and maintained by the Government.

Whatever the complexity of a general problem, it often includes simple elements, and the solution of the whole frequently is expedited by breaking it up and attacking the simplest element first. Evidently transportation on inland waterways represents the simplest element of the general transportation problem from the standpoint of National regulation.

Early settlement of the United States was determined by access to navigable waterways. The first settlements were established on the seacoast and the next important centers of population grew up at the head of navigation on the principal river systems.

As the population move westward communities were established at points on the Great Lakes, favorable for the concentration of traffic moving on tributary streams or over established trails. The Mississippi River and its main tributaries, giving access to New Orleans, opened the Middle West for settlement.

The fur trade, which initiated the exploration and development of the Northwest, depended primarily upon the use of the smaller lakes and river systems for transportation by canoe and flatboat. The important lake and waterway transportation systems later were connected by navigable canals, and in the early days of the Republic the Nation was held together by these arteries of water-borne commerce.

Background of Waterways.

WATERWAY transportation therefore has had the advantage of a powerful background. In addition, the existence of actual or potential water competition has had a vital bearing on the establishment of freight rate structures. For this reason, it has continued to receive support far in excess of anything justified by its economic aspect.

The economics of waterway transportation have been confused by the mass of statements presenting the case for and against. However, the whole subject has been given exhaustive study in a volume entitled "The American Transportation Problem," prepared for the National Transportation Committee by Dr. Harold G. Moulton and associates and published by the Brookings Institution in 1933.

According to this volume, our waterway history may be divided into two eras—prior to and after 1890. During the first era the States played the principal role in the provision of canals and improvement of navigable streams. By 1890, it had become apparent that, except in some special cases, inland waterways had been rendered largely obsolete by the development of a better transportation agency.

It is estimated that up to 1890 the total expenditure by States and by the Federal Government for the construction of canals and improvement of inland waterways amounted to approximately $300,000,000, of which about two-thirds represented outlays of State governments. By this time most of the canals had been abandoned.

From 1890 on there was increasing sentiment in favor of the rehabilitation of waterways to provide effective regulation of railway rates, with the Federal Government in the role of financial supporter. This movement grew to such an extent that about $1,177,000,000 was expended by the United States Government on waterway improvements between 1890 and 1933, not including expenditures on coastal harbors or the Great Lakes.

In the latter year projects were under way involving the further expenditure of approximately $800,000,000 over the next ten years, and the program has been given an immense impetus during the past two years through the expenditure of PWA funds, such as the allotment for the construction of a dam at Fort Peck, Mont., intended to regulate the low of water and improve navigation on the Missouri.

Private interests did not take advantage of the waterways improved and developed by the Federal Government for their free use, and the Government itself therefore entered the transportation field, commandeering during the war all privately owned floating equipment on the Mississippi and Warrior Rivers. This was followed by an allotment of $12,000,000 for the purchase of new floating equipment. Immediately following the war, these operations were transferred to the jurisdiction of the War Department.

New Unit Created.

IN 1924 Congress created the Inland Waterways Corporation as a separate unit of the War Department. In reporting the bill favorably to the House of Representatives, the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce stated that, within the next five years, the Government could demonstrate the practicability of water transportation, dispose of its properties to private capital, and withdraw from such activities. The committee further expressed the opinion that, if these operations could not be conducted successfully and at a fair profit after five years, private capital would not be attracted. In such event, "further expenditure of Government funds for the improvement of our inland waterways would be useless and should be stopped."

A new National policy then was under way—the beginnings of a factor that is still in operation, though the test period already has extended to ten years.

The Inland Waterways Corporation received equipment appraised at $10,236,684, and also was provided with $5,000,000 for additional capital; in 1928 Congress appropriated an additional $10,000,000. Dr. Moulton and his associates, after analyzing the reports of the corporation for 1931, came to the conclusion that, after allowing for the cost of the Washington office, but without allowance for credits resulting from interest on bank balances and on long-term loans to local communities, the net income was comparatively small.

No End of Books

Roar, Asia!

IF the late Messrs. Swinburne and Rossetti hadn't happened to pass a certain second-hand book stall, one day in the middle of the last century, and to pick up a little book of verses selling for a penny, not one reader in a thousand today would recognize the name Omar Khayyam.

THEO. HALL.

For the version of the "Rubaiyat" by that aimless and obscure genius, Edward Fitzgerald—a translation, for adherence to the spirit, if not the letter, which is certainly one of the very finest in the world—had a first printing in 1859 of only 200 copies, and so few of these sold that the remaining copies were dumped in a street stall for one penny each. Here the two poets discovered Fitzgerald's work, and their praise started it on its way around the world.

Yet of old Omar himself we know scarcely anything—he was an astrologer, probably in the court of the Sultan Malikshah; he wrote a book on algebra, commented on Euclid, and invented a new calendar; he was past his boyhood in 1073 and he died "some years" before 1135; and his grave is at Nisapur. That much is established.

But the paucity did not daunt Harold Lamb (author of "Tamerlane" and "Genghis Khan") when he set out to write "Omar Khayyam: a Life" (Doubleday Doran, $3). For there was the "Rubaiyat" itself, presumably autobiographical, full of hints which a lively imagination could pick up. One line, for example, suggests the fact that Omar knew the earth turned amid the heavens—and we have a scene in which Omar tries to explain this heresy to his colleagues. Thus, from bit to bit, Mr. Lamb puts together the mosaic of the great old free-thinking pessimist. It is a splendid picture, stirring with the life and color of medieval Persia.

From Paul Cohen-Portheim we have already had books on England, France, and Europe, as well as "Time Stood Still," his extraordinary account of four years in a civilian interment camp in England. Now comes his first book, printed in Germany in 1920 and at last translated into English—"The Message of Asia" (Dutton, $3.50).

It is a comparison of the intuition of Asia with the reason of the West, worked out along with a number of other fundamental antitheses. Serious and thoughtful, but not difficult to read, it attempts to help occidental minds understand the East. But the trouble is—being no expert in such matters, I take this from Mr. Willard R. Trask in The New York Herald-Tribune—that Mr. Cohen-Portheim holds a concept than which "nothing could conceivably be more foreign to the spirit of Asiatic philosophy." At other points in the book, as where the author asserts that "art grows out of unhappy love," for instance, it is sufficiently plain that Mr. Cohen-Portheim is marching on very debatable ground, indeed.

One of the richest books on Asiatic travel since Sven Hedin's "A Conquest of Tibet" is that of a young Dane, Henning Haslund—"Tents in Mongolia" (Dutton, $5). Writing with ease and a charming youthful exuberance, he records the 1923 Krebs Expedition into the heart of Asia and another journey of his own among Mongolian and Siberian nomads.

Here are tales of wolves and raging rivers, of caravans and markets, of Soviet prisons and lama rites, even of a seance with a Mongolian "shaman" or witch doctor. Especially amusing was the way Haslund got his contraband strychnine through the Mongolian customs—he pretended his Christmas tree ornaments (for trading) were magical objects; he laid them on the ground and bowed and grovelled before them; then he took out one of those "crackers" which children pull at parties, tore the ends apart with a bang, and fell howling on his face; and finally he put on the Charlie Chaplin mask it held and started running crazily around. By that time the Mongols were, in shall we say, a thoroughly respectful mood, and the contraband box was left unexplored.

There are dozens of excellent photographs, and a map, and even the music of Mongolian songs. "Tents of Mongolia," I am sure will carry you off like a magic carpet.

Dennis Kincaid, who wrote "Durbar" last year, gives us another novel of India—"Moonrise on the Indus" (Harcourt Brace, $2). The setting is the Northwest Province, beside the Afghan border. The heroine there is Kitti, a beautiful half-breed girl, a dancer and courtesan. Her wanderings and varied fortunes among exotic people make a lively tale of a very unusual flavor. It's decidedly worth trying.

Michael and Balboa.

September 29 is Michaelmas, the feast day of St. Michael the archangel. There is an obscure reference to him in Daniel, chapter 10, verse 13, and a strange, dramatic reference to him in the book of Jude, verse 9:

"Yet Michael the archangel, when contending with the devil he disputed about the body of Moses, durst not bring against him a railing accusation, but said, The Lord rebuke thee."

And in the book of Revelation, chapter 12, verse 7:

"And there was war in heaven; Michael and his angels fought against the dragon; and the dragon fought and his angels."

Michaelmas is an important day in the calendar in England, as it is one of the four quarter days—March 25, Lady Day; June 24, Midsummer Day; Michaelmas, September 29, and Christmas, December 25. The autumn term at Oxford University is called Michaelmas Term, and so is the law court term.

On September 29, 1513, Vasco Nunez de Balboa, the great Spanish explorer and discoverer of the Pacific Ocean, arrived on its shore and called it the Great South Sea, claiming it for Spain. On the Isthmus of Panama he had conquered the native tribes, but it is said that they liked him for his bravery and courtesy and fairness and kindness. One of these chiefs told him of big water on the other side of the mountains. With about 100 Spaniards and 1,000 natives, he climbed the mountain and saw the vast expanse of the Pacific.

Keats, who by a slip of memory thought it was Cortez instead of Balboa, gave a thrilling account of the discoverer's emotion when he first saw the endless blue water.

"Or like stout Cortez, when with eagle eye
He stared at the Pacific, and all his men
Looked at each other in a wild surmise—
Silent, upon a peak in Darien."

Keats had been reading the following passage in Robertson's "History of America:"

"At length the Indians assured them that from the top of the next mountain they should discover the ocean which was the object of their wishes. When, with infinite toil, they had climbed up the greater part of that steep ascent, Balboa commanded his men to halt, and advanced alone to the summit, that he might be the first who should enjoy a spectacle which he had so long desired. As soon as he beheld the South Sea stretching in endless prospect below him, he fell on his knees, and, lifting up his hands to heaven, returned thanks to God, who had conducted him to a discovery so beneficial to his country, and so honorable to himself. His followers, observing his transports of joy, rushed forward to join in his wonder, exultation, and gratitude."

For no good reason, Balboa was executed near Darien, in 1517.

Letter From a Dad to His Red-Headed Daughter

By Robert Quillen

My dear Louise—Despite all this talk of jobs and careers, the normal run-of-mill girl secretly or frankly lives in hope of meeting the right man and arranging a swell wedding. And I suppose you are like the rest.

Well, I have never known a girl who would heed advice in the matter of marriage, but a decent concern for your happiness requires me to give two words of warning and hope for the best.

The first concerns money. In real life as in fiction there are poor boys who meet the right girl and shy away because she is a daughter of the rich, and there are foolish girls who meet the right boy and refuse him because they fear poverty.

It is tragic folly to think of money in connection with love. True heart-and-soul love makes happiness, in spite of poverty or wealth; and all riches are ashes and all luxury is misery to those who live together in strife and malice.

When two people love one another devotedly and surely, nothing under heaven should be permitted to keep them apart. They have the greatest prize life can offer. Why throw it away for something of less value?

The second word of warning is related to the first. As nothing should part those who love, so nothing should bind together those who are enemies at heart.

When such things are said, unwise critics answer: "The sacredness of marriage ties must be preserved or our civilization will be destroyed." Which sounds reasonable, but needs qualification.

People should respect the courts, but only so long as the courts remain respectable. Marriage isn't worth preserving if it has become unbearable.

"Whom God hath joined together" shouldn't be parted. But if two people can't live in peace, God didn't join them together. He wouldn't make such a mistake.

You know or know about two young brutes who beat their wives within a year of their marriage, and you know couples that never exchange a friendly word.

It is a crime against reason for such people to live together.

If a trickster asks you to step on a throne and you find you have stepped into something vile, there is no low of God or man that requires you to stand in it for the remainder of your days.

Be slow to marry and marry for life; but don't let a mistake doom you to life-long misery. Love,

DAD.

Mosque Prophesies Christ

Text Cut Into Stone of Damascus Church Still Stands Although Edifice Is Now a Moslem Shrine—The Real Mission of Jews.

By William T. Ellis.

All tourists to Damascus are taken to see the city's principal "sight" "the big Mosque." It is indeed big. I was present once, as the guest of King Feisal, when 10,000 Moslem men were assembled in the courtyard of the Mosque to celebrate "The Night of Power." Many and curious are the aspects of the Mosque shown to visitors by the officials; but they never mention the most significant relic of all. One must climb over roofs to see, deeply cut in a portion of the wall, an inscription that was overlooked at the time the Moslems transformed this ancient Church of St. John into a mosque.

So there it remains to this day, a prophecy that is a quotation and amplification of the Golden Text of the present Lesson—"Thy kingdom, O Christ, is an everlasting kingdom." Amidst the triumphs of the Prophet Mohammed still stands this witness in stone to the truth that the kingdom of Christ survives all attacks and all reversals. It is a sublime affirmation of faith; and there is not a humble native Christian in all Damascus who does not know of this overlooked inscription.

That incident is an appropriate one on which to hang this present review of the closing period of Hebrew history. For the gloom and defeatism which dominated most Jews, in the period under consideration, is shared by multitudes today. Every month produces magazine articles about the decline of religion. Harper's recently contained a pathetic plea for "A Substitute for Religion." Professors without number are lecturing and writing as if the Gospel had been outmoded. Even preachers not a few are taking refuge in sociological discussions and ignoring the central truths of the Christian religion. There is a congenial mood prevalent for the study of the collapse of the Jewish nation.

Penalties For Neglecting Faith.

As it was of old, so it is now: Black disloyalty to God's clear commands had brought punishment upon His people. The ancient Jews had tried to play fast and loose with Jehovah. They adhered to Him as their Deity, for purely formal occasions; but in their lives they worshiped the licentious idols of their neighbors. They flouted the clear commands of the Law of God, and gave themselves up to sensuality, greed, oppression and all manner of injustice. Corruption prevailed in highest circles. Sophistication had taken the place of simple obedience. And God Almighty will never stand for that, either in Israel or in our own land.

This lesson is a swift survey of the hand of God in history. It reveals the blessings that follow obedience to the Divine will, and the disasters that ensue when God is forgotten or defied. The Jews went into captivity to Babylon and Assyria because they had first gone into captivity to their own carnal natures. Spiritual apostasy had been precedent to national calamity.

It is possible for a nation to go astray as for an individual. In this day of the cult of a formless "internationalism," it is well to remember that the Bible explicitly teaches that God deals with nations as well as with men. In the Divine calculation, the nation is a continuing unit, however much sophisticated moderns may affect to despise it. To help keep his own nation true to its noblest destiny is the highest work possible to a good citizen. Contrast, for example, the single-minded steadfastness of little Switzerland with the strange wobblings of some of its big neighbors.

If ever a nation had its own mission, that nation was the Jews. They were the chosen people. Ages before the Occident began to experment with democracy, and with human rights, these were clearly set forth in the Mosaic law.

One condition was attached: Fidelity to Jehovah. All of the material as well as spiritual interests of the Jews were wrapped up in loyalty to the God who had revealed Himself unto them. If they should be false to Him, they would suffer dire consequences.

In the face of the clear warnings of the Law, and of contemporary prophets in every stage of their existence, the Jews went after the strange gods which were but outward symbols of self-indulgence. And what a price they have paid! For the Jews have for centuries been the world's tragic people.

Warning Voices.

A long line of prophets were commissioned to bear God's word of warning and guidance to the Jews. This quarter's lessons have shown the greatest of them, from Elijah to Isaiah, fulfilling their high and heroic mission. As one said, speaking for God, "I drew them with the cords of a man, with hands of love." Isaiah cried, "Cease to do evil, learn to do well." And stressing this same ethical note, as the fulfillment of the law's spiritual requirements, Micah summarized: "What doth Jehovah require of thee, but to do justly, and to love kindness and to walk humbly with thy God." And over and over again the tender refrain is sounded by the prophets, "Jehovah your God is gracious and merciful, and will not turn His face away from you, if ye return unto Him."

As has been oft remarked, the teachings of these sturdy Hebrew prophets have an uncanny applicability to our own time. God still deals with people for their sins.

To an acute degree, there is today a "Jewish question." Anti-Semitism, thrust conspicuously before the world's eyes by the Hitler horrors, is growing apace in the world. The most thoughtful Jews of today are as gravely concerned over their people as were the burdened prophets of old. What is the way out for the Jew?

Perhaps it is to revive and accept his original mission. Surely it would solve the anti-Semitic problem if all Jews everywhere would accept Israel's original commission to be the embodiers and teachers of God's Law.

Turkish Embassy Aid Is Host to New Envoy

Secretary's Home Holds Many Treasures of Art, Including Fourteenth Century Icon, Embossed With Gold.

By Evelyn Peyton Gordon.

The Secretary of the Turkish Embassy, Ibrahim Seyfullah Bey, entertained at a small cocktail party yesterday afternoon in honor of the new Ambassador of Turkey, Mehmet Munir Bey, who has recently come to Washington, and the new Secretary of Embassy, Husyein Nizamettin Bey, who arrived in Washington last week.

The party was small, but most interesting, given in the apartment of Seyfullah Bey at 2540 Massachusetts avenue. The apartment in itself is interestingly decorated in shades of deep rust and brown, with soft green draperies. In the small dining room, Seyfullah Bey has arranged a long, narrow refectory table with a handsome cover of rich Turkish embroidery and a large bowl of hand-wrought Turkish silver. The Italian renaissance chairs with their high backs are placed close to the table, and behind them are tall, richly colored screens.

On the walls of the drawing room are a few of the very fine icons which Seyfullah Bey has collected. One, which he bought in Greece, is very valuable, and shows a madonna and child embossed heavily with gold, of fourteenth century workmanship. When the present owner found it, the museum of Athens wanted to buy it from him, and then attempted to restrain him from taking it from the country.

Burned in Use.

Another, made in the sixteenth century, shows deep burns where the flame of the votive candles, burned before it for many years, have seared the paint and burned into the wood. Other interesting bits of art are the small ivory pieces delicately painted with Persian figures in gilt and soft colors.

Cocktails and delicious appetizers occupied the guests until the arrival of the guests of honor, the new ambassador with the new secretary. Both are charming men, the ambassador small and dark, speaking beautiful English, and Nizamettin Bey, sounding more like a Cambridge man than one to whom the English language is not native. He has been in this country before, having served at the Turkish Consulate in New York a number of years ago.

The new Minister of Egypt, Irbrahim Ratib Bey, was also there and found an old friend from Cairo in the person of the First Secretary of the Italian Embassy, Signor Bartolomeo Migone, who was stationed in Cairo for two years. Mme. Ratib is now in Paris, with her two daughters, shopping as the Minister said, for all the "chapeaux et robes pour la saison a Washington." She will sail for this country in a few weeks to join the Minister in the Legation on Massachusetts avenue.

Wife Born in Istanbul.

The Naval Attache of the Italian Embassy, Capt. Ferdinando Casardi, was an early arrival and found much to say to the new members of the Turkish Embassy, for Signora Casardi, who has recently sailed for Italy to spend several months, was born in Istanbul, where her father, Signor Rosasco, was dean of the Diplomatic Corps for many years. Signora Casardi speaks Turkish extremely well, and is always a favorite with the members of the Embassy staff.

The Minister of Persia and Mme. Djalal arrived to greet the new envoys, the latter wearing a smart frock of black and white print with a black silk coat and a narrow brimmed black hat. Others in the group were Mrs. Celeste Crosby Miller, always vivacious and interesting, who had just arrived from the golf matches at the Chevy Chase Club; the First Secretary of the French Embassy, Mr. Roger Gaucheron, who returned to Washington from Europe only a few days ago; the Attache of the Belgian Embassy and Mme. Walravens, the latter wearing her characteristic black, but yesterday topped by a turban of emerald green crepe; the Charge d'Affairs of Czechoslovakia, Dr. Josef Nemecek, and the Secretary of the Yugoslav Legation, Dr. Ivan Franges.

Others there were Miss Carolyn Houston Thompson, wearing a costume of bright green; Miss Florence Harris, smart in wine colored crepe with a hat to match, and escorted by the Secretary of the Bulgarian Legation, young Mr. Vladimir Manoloff, and Mr. Harry Villard, of the Near Eastern Division of the Department of State.

British Team Entertained at Supper Dance

Women Golfers Are Guests of Seven Members of Embassy Staff.

Seven members of the staff of the British Embassy joined in giving a supper dance at the Shoreham last evening in honor of the visiting members of the British women's golf team who had concluded play in the women's international golf matches earlier in the day.

The hosts were Col. Maurice Fitzmaurice Day, Military Attache of the Embassy; Mr. A. F. H. Wiggin, Mr. Philip Mainwaring Broadmead, First Secretaries of the Embassy; Commander A. L. P. Men Turn Out in Colors for Polo Matches Here; Plaids, Stripes and Gay Patterns Enliven Scene

Masculine Demand for Brilliance Extends to Accessories as Well as to Coats and Suits; Argyles and Tattersall Patterns Good.

COLOR . . . and more color . . . is the keynote of men's fall fashions, as the recent polo matches at Potomac Park revealed. Maroons, salmons and other reddish casts have supplemented the summer favorites of yellow and gray. Green runs a close second, especially in mottled heathery tints. Conservative dressers lean toward black grounds with reddish overlays.

Accessories have more brilliant color and pattern this season than ever before. Striped Argyles and Tattersal patterns lead the fashion parade.

Below are sketches made by our fashion artist at field and paddock during the polo meet.

That very British lad in the field box wore argyle wool hose . . . patterns at least two inches big . . . horsey, but smart. Saw-ribbed Terrycloth (of all things) socks in maroon on the dashboard of a Packard. The striped-trousered dignitary who stood on a chair wore a neat paneled clock in red on black ground lisle.

Stripes as wide as the picture (honestly) dark and broken by pale pastels (very few and very smart) were seen on ties. Heaps of neat patterns on black grounds (these are favorites). Wool, shaggy ties in striped mixtures (swell with tweeds) and club striped knitted ties (giving new life to an old favorite).

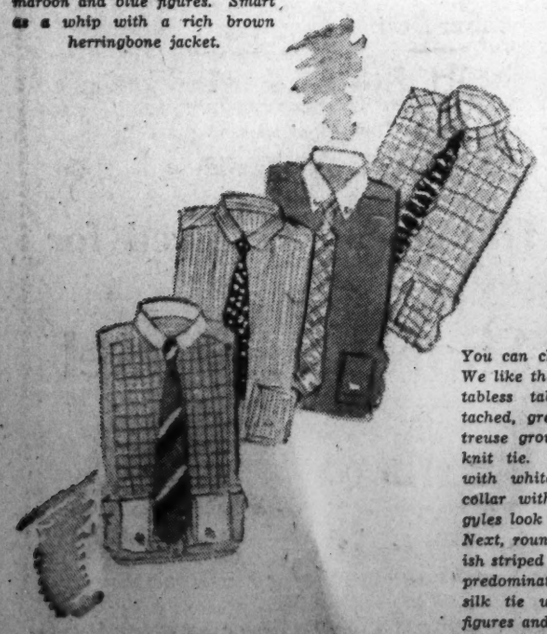
Even the girls gasped at this champagne suede jacket with bridle bit fasteners and black, red and yellow checked cashmere lining. It's a honey! Curved pockets that you can put your hands into!

Ever see elastic braces that look like shaggy wool (to match your ties)? We saw several. Bridle bit and stirrup cup jewelry. Saw another brace with clip ends (why worry about buttons popping?) and of all things (we've waited years for this) a patent fastened belt that adjusts to your girth to the fraction of an inch! Comfort plus fashion here!

Just two pot pie felts (but maybe it's the innoculation of a fashion virus?) The one we liked best had a rakish pheasant feather in the narrowish band.

Hundreds of sleeveless slipovers were seen in Argyles, checks and solid colors. The one we liked best was an old favorite made popular by the Prince of Wales years ago—the Fair Isle. This one has a cream ground and dull maroon and blue figures. Smart as a whip with a rich brown herringbone jacket.

No matter how you try to get away from them, where there are horses there are tattertails. This one is particularly doggy with its snappy revers and the "tat" break at the fifth button. Black and red on yellow ground. Worn with lovat jacket.



You can choose your own shirt. We like these best. Round point tabless tab, pinned collar attached, green tattersal on chartreuse ground. Green and coral knit tie. Next, blue chambray with white button down pique collar with silk argyle tie (argyles look big in all accessories). Next, round pointed collar, British striped shirt in which oxblood predominated, worn with a black silk tie with Spittalsfield type figures and, finally, a waffleboard pleated bosom shirt of ecru with white starched pique collar and cuffs and a striped repp tie.

May Bride Wear Street Dress at Evening Home Wedding?

By Mary Haworth.

DEAR MISS HAWORTH: I read your column every day and find your answers so adequate and I feel that any suggestions you will give men in regard to my problem will be the same.

• • • •

I am to be married this fall, and as I am a Catholic and the man I am marrying is a Protestant, I can not have a church wedding, so am planning to be married at home, the wedding taking place at night and having only a few friends and close relatives present.

Would it be proper for me to wear a street dress and hat and my attendant to wear a similar outfiet?

• • • •

I would like to have a small reception, after which we leave immediately on our honeymoon. Will you also advise me what I should serve at the reception. Thanking you for any suggestions you might give me, I hope to hear from you promptly.

Sincerely, YVONNE.

DEAR YVONNE: It is perfectly permissible for you to wear a street dress and hat, and for your attendant to be similarly garbed at a small, informal evening wedding at home.

• • • •

I hope, however, the dresses both of you chose will be very feminine and flattering, and fashioned along distinctive, semiformal lines. Not savoring too much of spectator sports, nor of the business office. The sort of dress that becomes a daytime costume through its suave simplicity, rather than because of obvious utility. And that the hats you wear will be the perfect complement of the dresses—not just satisfactory bits of headgear.

• • • •

Etiquette prescribes that the wedding reception collation include tea and cocoa—or bouillon substituted for the latter—an adequate supply of thin sandwiches, little fancy cakes, chosen with an eye to decorativeness, and, of course, the wedding cake.

Arrange the table as for afternoon tea. In a small home, a rather long table may be placed close to one wall. At one end of the table tea may be served; at the other end, cocoa or bouillon. There may be four trays containing sandwiches and little cakes, one for cakes and one for sandwiches, at either end of the table.

• • • •

The center of the table, along the side nearest the wall, may be banked with a floral centerpiece; and in front of this, the wedding cake will make an inviting picture. Before this table the guests may pass for servings.

Plates, cups and saucers, napery and silver may be arranged in formal design on either side of the cocoa and tea sets at opposite ends of the table. M. H.

Care of Dependent Children Increases

More dependent and neglected children were being cared for by public agencies at the end of 1933 than at the end of 1932, both in institutions and in foster homes, while the number under supervision in the homes of parents or relatives declined 16 per cent, according to the monthly report on social statistics in child-welfare and related fields issued by the Children's Bureau of the U. S. Department of Labor.

The total increase in the number of children cared for by the reporting public agencies was 3 per cent. There was a 10 per cent increase in the number cared for in institutions and a 6 per cent increase in the number cared for in foster homes. The latter increase was in the number of children cared for in free or boarding homes, since those cared for in work or wage homes decreased 5 per cent.

Actresses Tell How They Keep Their Beauty

Hollywood Stars Tell All at Request of Their Studios.

By Frances Mangum.

PERHAPS in no other city in all the world is beauty given the concentration and varied study that it is in Hollywood. As a result, women all over America look to this Mecca of stars for advice and suggestions about the care of the hair and skin.

Not infrequently studios request popular actresses to hand in beauty hints they have found helpful, and which in turn might prove of value to others. Some of these are listed here:

Anything for Dinner.

After much persuasion Wynne Gibson divulged her secret of how to obtain and maintain that sought-after school-girl figure. Liquids for breakfast, salads for luncheon, and anything—even a juicy steak for dinner—will do the work.

Irene Dunne always smooths a softening cream on her face before she goes under the dryer when her hair is being finger-waved. This prevents drying of the skin.

Pert Kelton has the very newest angle on the lipstick situation. She sometimes uses a deep orange shaded stick for her lower lips and a dark carmine for the upper.

Genevieve Tobin says eye baths night and morning with warm and then cold boric acid solution will give a sparkle to the "windows of the soul."

Offsets Sun's Touch.

Virginia Bruce uses tincture of benzoin in warm water to keep her skin soft and white and offset the unkind touch of sun and wind.

To cleanse the skin and tighten it, Diana Wynyard pats pure strained honey into it and allows it to remain for about ten minutes. The honey is then washed off with lukewarm water. It acts as an astringent as well as healing agent.

Dolores Del Rio is one of the very few women who can wear a flower in her hair. She affects gardenias and hibiscus and recommends them for slim dark women.

Lovely, shiny, curled-up eye lashes may be obtained by using old fashioned mustache wax on them, avers Frances Dee.

Strictly Speaking

Try These.

1. What is a cache, and how is it pronounced?
2. Is there any difference between a Frankfurter and a Wienerwurst?
3. What is maraschino?
4. What is the preferable pronunciation of scenario—see-NAY-ri-o or see-NAH-ri-o?
5. Where is the accent in maniacal?

Answers Here.

1. A cache is a hiding or storing place, as for goods, treasure or provision. Pronounced KASH—"a" as in "ask."
2. Yes; for while both are sausages, the Wienerwurst (WE-ner-woost) is made in a shorter link than the Frankfurter.
3. Maraschino (mar-a-SKEE-no) is a liqueur distilled from the fermented juice of a certain cherry.
4. Webster gives see-NAH-ri-o as being preferable to see-NAY-ri-o. Phyfe gives shay-NAH-ri-o, only. Take your choice.
5. On the second syllable. Ma-NIGH-a-kal (the last "a" is short).

Plump Police Ordered To Lose Double Chins

Greenwich, Conn., Sept. 28 (Spl.). The fat policemen of this town must either get thinner or turn in their shields.

For the Police Commission has ordered Chief Patrick J. Flanagan to see that the overly-plump policemen lose their double chins. The two at whom the order is directed are Patrolman Everett Varnes and Carl Johnson, a spokesman for the Police Commission said. Everybody was too polite to mention the exact poundage of these two.

Where's the Envelope?

English Women Blaze New Business Trails

By Hope Ridings Miller.

ENGLISH WOMEN have not yet been affected by the back-to-the-home movement sweeping over other countries across the Atlantic, according to Mrs. Margaret Wintringham, first English-born woman member of Parliament.

Interviewed yesterday afternoon at the clubhouse of the American Association of University Women, where she will be guest speaker at a dinner tonight, Mrs. Wintringham discussed some of the feminine trends she had noted in her country.

"If there is any back-to-the-home movement in England, it has certainly escaped my observation," she said. "It seems to me, in fact, there are more women in every walk of English public life than ever before.

"This, I think, is borne out by the fact the 1931 census showed, in regard to women wage earners, an increase of 3 per cent over the 1921 census. And while this indicates women are not displacing men to any great extent, it proves, also, women are not going back into the home."

She believes women, on the contrary, are becoming more vitally interested in governmental affairs and a more important part of England's political and business life.

"Englishmen can be thanked for this to a great extent," she said, "for, like men in America, they are coming to realize women are not trying to compete but cooperate with them in the industrial, business and professional world.

"Then, too, women have proved they can, if properly trained, fill almost any type of position. There are competent lawyers, physicians, and teachers all over England. There are women, also, in almost every branch of business.

"The advertising manager of 'Punch,' one of England's most widely circulated magazines, is a woman. I could mention a number of other women filling equally important positions which in past years would have been given only to men.

"But this does not mean," she hastened to add, "English women are taking positions away from men. They are, rather, holding their own and proving themselves capable of accomplishing many worthwhile things outside the home."

Tonight she will talk on "Women in the New Economic Order." Wednesday she will talk over the radio on "Modern Education in England."

ACCOMPLISH THE "PROFESSIONAL TOUCH" WITH THE NEW HOLLYWOOD PATTERNS

Clothes made from these patterns are distinguished by "dressmaker" details . . . and the woman who sews finds it easy to put the professional touch on the things she makes herself. The famous HOLLYWOOD PATTERN SERVICE begins Monday on the Woman's Page of The Post.

The service includes a sketch of the dress . . . and a brief fashion talk which explains the importance of the particular dress of that day in today's fashion trend. It also describes briefly how it is to be made and the amount of material required . . . enough information to tell you whether it is something suited to your needs.

Patterns may be obtained from The Washington Post by mail . . . for 15 cents each.

Hollywood patterns are unusual and we sincerely believe compare with patterns of much greater cost.

Eating Place Specializes in Tasty Chicken

By Ruth Anne Davis.

AREN'T unexpected pleasures the most delightful kind? And isn't it a thrill to stumble on a dining place that "everybody" doesn't know about?

It's an unusual thing to happen in Washington, where so many tearooms and restaurants line the highways and byways and advertisements are eloquent in their praise. But, strangely enough, only a block or two from Connecticut avenue is a stately brick house which at one time was a private home, and even now has the atmosphere of one.

From the minute you enter the iron-grated doors you feel as though you should take off your hat and coat and settle back in an easy chair. There's no sign of a large dining hall with stereotyped tables and chairs. Instead, flanking a magnificent staircase, is a low-ceilinged, heavily beamed sitting room with an immense fireplace along one side. Here the epitome of ease is spelled in terms of large overstuffed chairs and sofas, indirect lighting, books, and lovely old paintings. Through a doorway leading from one corner of the room one sees one of the most charming dining nooks it was ever a hostess' pleasure to plan.

Here again the ceilings are low, but they are painted a light cream so the light that pours through the row of windows along the side seems to flood the room. Walls are a soft blueish-grey that harmonize with the midnight blue of the tables set with white china plates.

But atmosphere is not sufficient in a dining room, nor need it be. There's a cook in the kitchen who is a graduate of one of the largest cooking schools in the country, and she prides herself on the quality of her dishes.

One may order a plate luncheon and know it will live up to highest expectations. At dinner there is a choice of cocktails or soups, a choice of several meats, which are served in company with three fresh vegetables. And then a choice of salads and desserts. All the bread is home made.

Chicken is a specialty there, either broiled or fried.

Incidentally there are two other things which should be mentioned:

The spoon bread—and the delicious cranberry, lime, lemon or pineapple sherbets served with dinner.

Coffee That Pleases.

Talleyrand, the French statesman, is credited with a statement which exactly describes the coffee sold in a local shop.

"It must be pure as an angel, strong as love, black as the devil and hot as Hades." (His word was stronger than Hades.)

The owner of this shop is a man who has sold coffee for many, many years—and needless to say, he knows his coffee. Furthermore, he takes a very just pride in it.

It is a naturally fresh product, roasted every day and tested by the manager personally. In order to accommodate those who like "real coffee" he has arranged this service whereby you may telephone and it delivers no pound within an hour's time. This eliminates "shelf age" and fulfills the truth of "from roaster to cup the same day."

Shampoo for Rugs.

Furthermore, it removes hair oil and perspiration stains from upholstery and prevents dry rot.

Housewives will find it can be used safely on any fabric water will not injure. And after using it once they will vouch for it as being one of simplest, most efficient cleansers of this type on the market today.

If you have a fine pair of drapes that would cost a mint of money to have cleaned, try a can of this cleanser. If the budget is keeping the rugs at home this season, this liquid will do a fine job on them. Motorists may use it to cleanse the interior of the car and remove grease and grime.

It comes in a can containing sufficient quantity to clean 40 lampshades, 10 upholstered chairs, several divans, a large 9x12 rug or two motor car interiors.

Simplifies Cake Baking.

It's generally admitted it's entirely too much trouble to go home and stir up a cake, gingerbread, or even waffles and muffins. And, after all, why should one? A young woman who knows her cooking from A to Z has already done it for you. She has prepared a mixture for devil's food cake and all the other goodies mentioned. All you do is add a portion of water, stir and bake. In a very short time there you are—dainties fit for a king.

The mixture comes in a box costing only 29 cents. Chocolate or butterscotch icing may be bought separately for 15 cents.

Russian Scented Cologne.

Eau de cologne of a brilliant green comes in odd-shaped, three-sided bottles surmounted with a red metal top.

PILLAR TO POST

BLACK lace scanties have a subtle and intriguing effect upon a wearer's personality—but this is beginning the story backwards.

A black cloud began it, an ominious affair that hung low over the heads of golfers and galleries in the match between the British and American women's teams at the Chevy Chase club. The score was 1 up for the British and everyone was too engrossed in the game to flee before the impending storm. The menacing black cloud caught up with several hundred people at the seventh hole and uncorked it's vials.

• • • •

Under a very ineffective tree two women decided to make a dash for the clubhouse where one of them has an apartment. Upon arriving they found it necessary to change their clothing from the skin out. The resident offered her friend a dress to wear—and the black lace scanties. The friend, who had always regarded herself as more utilitarian than decorative, stepped into the filmy black lace dubiously. The frock she slipped on was a lovely forest green designed to emphasize the glory of its owner's crown of reddish gold. On her friend, a much smaller woman, it hung in limp folds, and so dreary did the wearer feel she might have posed for a picture entitled, "Orphan of the Storm."

• • • •

However, another costume was found that was more becoming. The brown wrap-around skirt and striped brown and white silk sweater looked very smart and tailored. But the wearer felt anything but tailored inside—due to the black lace scanties. She had a strange and pleasant feeling of being very devastating, and her assurance was increased enormously.

• • • •

This incident reminded Mrs. Clarence Goodwin of a dinner she and Judge Goodwin gave in honor of the late Chief Justice Taft. A cold came on very suddenly and Mrs. Goodwin found herself desperately in need of a handkerchief. Turning to the guest of honor she whispered a plea for his handkerchief. It was handed to her under the table accompanied by the famous Taft smile and the comment that he was always glad of the opportunity to help a lady in distress.

• • • •

Getting soaked at the golf matches had a confusing effect on Mrs. Goodwin, for when she changed her clothes after the storm she could not find a brown purse to go with the brown plaid dress she put on. All the time she hunted for the purse, it was tucked under her arm. Picking up another purse, she reentered the lounge of the club and it wasn't until after she had been soothed by a warming drink, she discovered she was carrying two purses.

Sir Charles Ross, the distinguished Scotch inventor, was drenched in the tournament, and knowing no one living at the club whose clothes would fit him, he sat on the veranda and permitted his clothes to dry on him. This process was helped considerably by heat from within generated by a warm discussion of the MacDonald clan with Mrs. Goodwin, who is related to it.

• • • •

The women had a great advantage over the men because of the hair dryers installed in their dressing rooms for the convenience of users of the swimming pool. Among those seen holding articles of clothing before the dryers were Mrs. Bishop Hill, Mrs. E. L. Frank, jr., Mrs. J. W. Beller, Mrs. H. R. Quinter, Mrs. A. S. Merrill, Mrs. Harold Beck and Mrs. Harrison Brand, vice chairman of the golf committee.

Child Chats

By Alice Fox Pitts.

THE OBJECT of an allowance, obviously, is to teach a child to manage money wisely. The purpose is defeated if, as often happens, the mother sets an allowance and then dictates how it is to be spent.

Jimmy's mother gives him 50 cents a week. Five cents a day is for milk from the school cafeteria, to drink with the luncheon he brings from home. Ten cents a week is for Sunday school. The same amount is to go into his bank weekly, for his college fund, leaving him 5 cents for pencils, club dues, candy and similar items. Since this gives him practically no decisions to make for himself, I question whether it teaches him how to spend.

Some mothers give their children an allowance and find it works to advantage. Personally, I have never found that it led to anything but arguments and tears. I have had greater success in giving children the money they need as they need it, and letting them spend birthday or other gift money as they please.

With $2 in his pocket, a boy of ten has a real decision to make. Shall he squander it on small toys, or spend the lump sum on a sturdy fire engine that has taken his fancy? If he pursues the former course, and finds the cheap toys are soon broken, so he has nothing to show for his money, he has learned a lesson which will guide him the next time he has money to spend.

(Tuesday: Helping the Doctor.)

What has been your experience in teaching children to manage money? Suggestions are invited, and should be addressed to Alice Fox Pitts, in care of The Washington Post.

Jam Recipes Flock to Post For Contest

Scotch Grape Preserves From Mrs. Lemaine Gets First.

By Susan Mills.

MORE jars to add to the collection on the pantry shelf. This week's recipes brought in many new and delicious ideas.

To Mrs. F. Lemaine, 154 Ocean avenue, Lynbrook, Long Island, first prize, $3, is awarded. Second prize, $2, goes to Mrs. Charles C. Kennon, 3120 Thirty-eighth street northwest. Mrs. E. M. Allen, 2145 California street, apartment 35, receives third prize, $1.

Prizes were awarded on the basis of simplicity, practicality and originality.

The recipes follow in order:

Scotch Grape Jam.

3 pounds seedless grapes
1 pound citron cut very small
¾ pound coarsely chopped walnut meats
2¼ pounds sugar

Put a layer of grapes in bottom of kettle and crush. Add the remaining grapes, sugar and citron. Cook slowly, stirring often to mash the fruit. If jam is thick when a teaspoon is tested on a cold plate, add the chopped nuts. Pour into sterilized jars, cover with paraffin and when cold put on the tops.

Paradise Jelly.

10 quinces
1 quart cranberries
20 tart apples

Peel the quinces and slice but do not core. Slice uncored and unpeeled apples. Put in preserving kettle with the cranberries and just barely cover with water. Boil until soft, and drain in jelly bag. Measure juice and boil 10 minutes. Skim, add a cup of sugar for every cup of juice. Boil until a few drops harden on cold plate, pour into sterilized jars and seal.

Roman Beauty Fruit Butter.

(Made with dried fruits)

Wash in warm water the following dried fruits:

¾ pound peaches.

Place in large saucepan and add 3 pints boiling water,
1 cup honey.
2 pounds sugar.

Cook slowly until the fruit is soft and thick, then rub through sieve into clean saucepan and add 1 pound walnut meats chopped fine. Seal with paraffine.

Honorable mentions go to Miss Sallie Mason, Miss Olive Pindell, Mrs. A. Hildreth Spilman, and Mrs. M. Wolfer. Their recipes will appear on this page next Tuesday.

What Today Means

"Libra."

IF SEPTEMBER 29 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 11:15 a. m. to 1:15 p. m., from 4:15 to 6:15 p. m. and from 8:15 to 10:15 p. m. The danger periods are from 7:15 to 9:15 a. m., from 2:15 to 4:15 p. m. and from 6:15 to 8:15 p. m.

On this September 29, you may be subjected to influences conducive to misunderstandings, especially in the making of engagements or arranging meeting places. If you are planning to meet or see some one it might prove advisable to confirm your engagement, or have it so clearly understood that there will be no danger of a mix-up.

Married and engaged couples, as well as sweethearts, will be wis if they are careful what they say to each other, as on the spur of the moment in a heated discussion, something might slip out which might be regretted later on.

If a woman and September 29 is your natal day, you may have ample gratifying evidence of the love and esteem you are held in before this day passes. If Prosperity is not right around the corner, it is certainly on its way to favor you with a visit.

Social affairs may find more favor in your sight than business does, but remember without the money backing business will give you social activities must languish, so it might be well to give more thought to financial matters. Whenever love claims you it will provide a safe abiding place for you, with the right man.

The child born on September 29, generally, when it reaches its teens, is apt to take itself rather seriously and is overly prone to express its opinion without it being asked for. This is a passing phase and if diplomatically handled can be easily corrected.

If a man and September 29 is your birth anniversary, you are decidedly artistic, as well as practical. You can make an equal success either in music, voice culture, opera or the legitimate drama, painting or writing, as well as you can in commercial pursuits.

THE MAN WITHOUT NERVES

By E. PHILLIPS OPPENHEIM

Sam Cresson, who lives in Sandyways, London suburb, is found dead; a note says he has committed suicide due to financial reverses. His banker, Huitt, reveals recent withdrawals from his account, which suggest that he might have been the victim of blackmail.

There is a mysterious newcomer in the village, a young man named Tyssen, who seeks information about the tragedy for material for a novel. Anthony and Pauline Sarson see Tyssen on the golf course at night, making remarkable shots, but he denies being an expert.

Another angle in the story is a dinner party at which Lord Milbank has as his guests Huitt, the banker, and Sir Julian Bott, a London financier. The latter refuses to undertake development of Lord Milbank's concessions. That same night Anthony Sarson is escorting a girl home from a dance when they come across a mysterious car, parked on a lonely road; the chauffeur is surly and refuses Anthony's proffered help. Anthony decides to return alone and investigate; near the spot where he saw the car he sees lights in the house of Mme. de Sayal, a mysterious woman living in the vicinity.

THE car, notwithstanding its unusual position and its suggestion of secrecy, was on a more or less public road where it had a perfect right to be. If he called the sergeant out of bed and took him up with him, the chauffeur, in the face of authority, might offer a perfectly reasonable solution of his presence, and the sergeant would crawl back into bed, cursing the curiosity of people who went about at this hour of the night.

If anything was to be done, he decided, he must do it alone. He had a moment's ugly recollection of something which might have been in the hand of the man who had accosted him, a recollection which brought him a fresh instinct of hesitation. In the end, however, his spirit of enterprise prevailed. He stole back to the garage, helped himself to the shorter and thicker of the two walking sticks which he kept there, slipped an electric torch into his pocket and started out on his brief adventure.

The first part of it was easy enough, for, although the darkness remained intense, he knew his way too well to make a mistake. He reached the pine woods and slackened his pace, walking almost on tiptoe, for here he was within hearing of the scene of his adventure. The car, he decided, must still be there, or he would have heard it start. Before him, only a few yards away, were the two bungalows. Here he came to a sudden standstill. The farther one, which was occupied by the servant of Madam de Sayal, was dark and silent, but from the nearer one there was a faint chink of light where the curtains failed to meet. This was the bungalow in which all Sandyways was interested—the home of the unknown lady.

Anthony Sarson stood motionless, out of the possible sight of any human being, so long as he remained where he was in the shadow of the thicky-growing pine trees. His eyes were fixed upon that thin pencil of light between the curtains in the living room of the bungalow. He concentrated every nervous effort of which he was capable upon the task of listening, closing his eyes and turning his head first in one direction, then another. Not a sound. The far-away rumble of a train seemed to make even more intense the stillness close at hand.

The thread of light from the window had become, he fancied, a shade wider. He watched it eagerly. The necessity for action of some sort was beginning to oppress him. He felt inclined to tiptoe his way to the window, stoop down and play the complete eavesdropper. Why not? What was there to be ashamed of? Why should there be a light in a lonely dwelling like this at 3 o'clock in the morning within 100 yards of the spot where he had encountered that mysterious motorcar? He made up his mind for action quite suddenly. He stole across the carpet of pine needles, into which the soles of his dancing shoes sank noiselessly.

Saw Nothing.

He leaned toward the crack of light and peered in. Nothing. Just a segment of a room. He drew back with a little gasp. Something impelled him to turn his head toward the steep ascent which led to the byway. The trees grew less thickly there. There was a glimmer of wan light like the opening of a cave. He strained his eyes until they ached. As the seconds passed, he knew that he was right; absolutely motionless, the dark figure of a man was standing barely 30 feet away! Face and figure were alike invisible.

It was just a shape—scarcely more—yet in those breathless few seconds of strained watching the figure gave Anthony the impression that he, too, was standing there as a sentinel—watching. Very slowly he abandoned his crouching attitude. Flattening himself against the wall, he raised himself to his full height, he gripped his stick in his right hand. Before he could move, however, other strange things had happened. The chink of light faded into darkness, the door behind him was noiselessly opened, a white arm stole out into the blackness and his hand was gripped. He heard a soft voice in his ear.

Voice Heard.

"Don't speak. Come."

He was drawn through the open door into a well of darkness. Behind him he heard the door close, shut with a spring lock. He could hear soft and rapid breathing close at hand, caught a breath of unfamiliar but strangely delicate perfume.

"Stay where you are," the voice whispered. "Don't move till I tell you."

The voice came to Anthony again. Its owner was a little farther away now.

"What were you doing up against my window?"

"I was trying to see in," Anthony replied. "There was a chink between the curtains."

She drew them tightly together. He fancied from the sound of her footsteps that she was examining the curtains at the other windows. In time she was apparently satisfied. A soft light broke out in the room. Anthony saw her for the first time. Her face was as marble white as the gown in which she was wrapped—a soft filmy affair of lace and chiffon, fastened around her with a girdle. In her eyes was fear.

"Why did you want to see into my room?" she asked. "Speak quietly, please."

"There was a strange car in the byway when I came home half an hour ago," he said. "I fancied that there must be something wrong. I came back again to see."

Moan Escaped Her.

"You live down in what they call the Oasis?"

"Yes."

"Well, did you find anything wrong?"

"There's a man standing about thirty feet away, just outside the wood," he confided. "I was just going to speak to him when you drew me in."

A little moan seemed to come trembling from her lips.

"And the car?" she murmured.

"I do not know," he answered. "I have not been as far as that yet. I was attracted by the light in your room."

"Who was in the car when you passed it?"

"No one, so far as I could see. There was a chauffeur or a police official standing beside it."

"Do you think any one can see a light now?"

"I should think not," he answered, examining the curtains. "Tell me, had you any visitors tonight?"

"Is that any concern of yours?"

"I suppose it isn't," he admitted. "Still, this is a very quiet corner of the world. Unusual happenings seldom come our way."

"Really? Yet I am told that a man committed suicide in one of your sacred houses there only a few days ago."

"That's true," he acknowledged. "Such a thing has never happened before."

Mysterious Night.

She walked the length of the room and back again. She was carrying in her hand a fragment of fine cambric crumpled into a ball.

"Tonight," she confided, "I am afraid. There is something I don't understand. What is your name?"

"Anthony Sarson."

"I know," she said. "You live near the postoffice and you have a pretty sister. Do you often come out looking for adventure at this hour of the morning?"

"Never—upon my honor," he assured her. "I came home late from a dance at Godalming. It was the car which intrigued me. I came up to see what it meant."

"Yes. And then?"

He realized that she was in a terribly nervous state.

"Don't you remember? I told you," he said gently, "that I saw a light in your window and I looked in. It was a mean thing to do, perhaps, but it was simply because I meant to help any one who was in trouble. Then I saw that motionless figure quite close, then your arm came out and drew me in and here I am."

"I was afraid," she confessed. "I had seen that figure, too."

"I can't imagine," he said, "why you live up here alone, if you are at all nervous."

"I have a servant in the next bungalow. I am not really alone. I have been in more dangerous places."

He'd Better Go.

"I think," he went on, after a moment's pause, "that you had better let me go. I will see what that man is doing about the place and try to get to the bottom of the mystery of the car."

"Yes," she agreed. "I suppose you had better go. You cannot stay here. Will you take my advice?"

"If it is good," he answered, smiling.

"Don't go any higher up the hill," she begged. "Go down the way you came."

"But I want to find out about that man who is hanging around," he pointed out. "He may come and annoy you. I should like to find out if the car is still there, too."

She came a little closer to him. He saw her more clearly than before. She had the appearance of one who had been suffering from a great strain. There were dark rims under her eyes. Every now and then she seemed out of breath.

"Take my advice," she implored. "Do not meddle with things you do not understand. I wish I could keep you here until it is light, but I dare not. Wait! Take a drink before you go."

She motioned him toward a small table by the side of the wall. There was a decanter of whisky and a decanter of brandy and three glasses. He gave a little start as he moved toward it. Two of the glasses had been used. Two bottles of soda water had been opened.

Must Be Secret.

"Will you help yourself, please," she invited. "Help yourself and then you must go. You can do nothing for me. I do not wish you to come to any harm."

"You are very kind."

He poured himself out some whisky and opened the remaining bottle of soda water.

"Can't I give you something?" he asked.

She shook her head.

"Nothing, thank you. Do you mind drinking quickly and going?"

He smiled.

"I promise you I will drink quickly," he said. "I was thirsty before I left Godalming."

He kept his word and set down the glass, empty. Once more he looked toward the two empty tumblers. She came to his side and laid her fingers upon his arm.

"I drew you in here," she said, "because I was afraid that you might come to harm, and I never like innocent people to suffer. Promise me something." Anything you have noticed tonight or seen you will keep to yourself—you will never speak of?"

"I promise, certainly."

"If you have a suspicion," she went on feverishly, "that I have had a visitor, you will forget it?"

"I will forget it."

"Then go now, please," she pleaded. "Look—take this."

Revolver Offered.

She picked up a small revolver from a table close at hand.

"I hope you will not need it," she said, "but you might. It would be safer to have it, at any rate."

He looked at the weapon curiously. It was a very up-to-date affair, loaded in five chambers. He touched the sixth and looked at her. She pushed him away.

"Never mind," she begged. "No question, please. I give you that for your protection. Never bring it back, I never want to see it again."

He slipped it into his pocket. She led him toward the door, it opened noiselessly.

"Straight home," she insisted. "Leave the hill alone."

"Very well," he answered. "I promise."

The door closed behind him almost at once. The darkness seemed, if possible, to have become more intense. He groped his way for a yard or two, ran into a tree and swore softly to himself. Then came the shock. He had no warning. He heard no sound. There was not the slightest indication of any living person, only a thunderous blow at the back of his head, so overwhelming that his tongue was palsied. Not a cry came from his lips. The earth sank beneath his feet. He was unconscious even before he collapsed upon the bed of pine needles.

How to Keep Well

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

Heart Irregularity.

THE most common and persistent irregularity of the human heart beat is sometimes referred to as auricular fibrillation or mitral pulse. It has become fully recognized only during the last 25 years.

The cause of the condition may be laid at the door of diseases like rheumatic fever, chronic sore throat, or arteriosclerosis. Other conditions that influence the heart rhythm are thyroid disease and syphilis.

The characteristic irregularity is generally described by the patient as a fluttering, a spasmodic beating or pounding of the heart. Occasionally, patients are conscious of a skipping sensation. Pain is rarely a symptom, and it is striking to observe great improvement in the general condition following a tactful, optimistic and cheerful interview with a skilled physician. The individual is usually greatly relieved to learn that angina pectoris almost never occurs in association with auricular fibrillation.

Interference with the heart beat is occasionally of the "come and go" type. More frequently, however, it is permanent. When it is transitory it may occur in the presence of any acute disease such as rheumatism.

The condition may be detected with fair ease. It is the only abnormal heart rhythm that is increased following exercise. The diagnosis is often made on the recognition of a persistent irregularity of the heart with the ventricle beating 120 times per minute or more.

Rest in bed in a half reclining position is an important part of the treatment. Sleep should be encouraged and the diet as generous and as nourishing as the condition of the patient will allow.

Two powerful remedies are available for the treatment of this condition, namely, digtalis and quinidine. When either is used the size of the dose and its frequency and the general management of the patient must be in the hands of an experienced physician.

Fortunately, the condition is one in which the discriminating use of powerful remedies is frequently followed by favorable results. The late Sir James MacKenzie retaught the medical world the value of careful adjustment of the doses of heart drugs and that through their use patients may be maintained in fair states of efficiency and comfort for many years. In about 60 per cent of favorable cases quinidine will bring about the restoration of the normal heart rhythm.

Occasionally drugs that will increase the flow of urine will be required and there are a number upon which definite reliance may be placed.

The great majority of fibrillating hearts begin after the age of 40, and if the condition is unassociated with valvular heart disease life expectancy under careful management is generally good.

5 Held in Bail In Ambuscade Of U. S. Agent

2 Other Suspects May Face Arraignment in Baltimore Today.

With seven men under arrest in connection with the shooting of Internal Revenue Investigator Cyrus Thomas, at Forestville, Md., last Tuesday, Federal agents yesterday declared their case "practically cleared."

George Armstrong, of Forestville, brother of Wallace Armstrong, alleged owner of the raided still, was arrested in Upper Marlboro, and five of the men were arraigned in Baltimore.

The arraignment took place before United States Commissioner J. Frank Supplee. The men, Wallace Armstrong, Forest Smith, John Kelly and Ed Barnes, colored, were charged with assaulting and shooting Thomas. They were held under $10,000 bail each for hearing, October 11.

Says Proctor Fired Shot.

Dominic Proctor, colored, who was arrested in Washington Thursday night, was described by District Attorney Bernard J. Flynn as the man who actually fired on Thomas from ambush.

Both Proctor and George Armstrong were being held at the Upper Marlboro Jail late yesterday. Proctor was returned to Washington during the day for a short interrogation by local police on the shooting of Motorcycle Patrolman S. T. Creech.

It is expected that Proctor and Armstrong will be taken to Baltimore for arraignment before Commissioner Supplee today. District Attorney Flynn will ask that Proctor be held without bail.

It was reported at Providence Hospital yesterday that Thomas had "an even chance" to live if poisoning did not set in.

Many Aided In Hunt.

The hunt for the members of the alleged bootlegging syndicate has been described as the greatest man hunt ever staged by Federal agents in southern Maryland. W. A. Heddens, supervisor of agents in this section, has directed the hunt.

Thomas was shot from ambush after he had arrested one of the men who was loading the alleged liquor in a car near the still. L. J. May, another agent who was chasing another man found at the car, said he heard the report of a shotgun and three pistol shots and returned to find Thomas wounded.

Patrolman S. T. Creech was wounded in the shoulders a few hours later when he attempted to apprehend a car on Pennsylvania avenue southeast at the bridge. Police believe the car contained persons connected with the shooting at the still.

Governor Thanked For Guard at Mill

Winchester Rotary Pleased by Action in Strike.

Winchester, Va., Sept. 28 (AP).—Resolutions thanking Gov. Peery for sending State police here last week "to aid local police in protecting local mill employes who wished only to continue their daily tasks free from molestation," were passed by the Winchester Rotary Club and forwarded to the executive today.

Another resolution endorsed the "prompt and effective measures used by our mayor and police officials in meeting the situation."

State police were sent to Winchester after local officers had arrested 19 visitors from West Virginia who were alleged to have been distributing literature urging Winchester textile workers to go on strike.

Tyler Hall Contract Awarded at Staunton

Staunton, Va., Sept. 28 (AP).—A contract for the construction of a building to replace Tyler Hall at the Virginia School for the Deaf and Blind was signed here today. Tyler Hall has been condemned because of shifting walls.

The new school unit will be constructed by the Blackwell Engineering Co., of Richmond, successful bidders for the job at $91,883. The heating contract was let to H. C. Croft, of Staunton, at $5,249.76. Tyler Hall will be razed at once and the new building, containing dormitory quarters and classrooms, will be finished within eight months.

Radio Waves and Ripples

By George M. Adams, Jr.

IF the Lindbergh kidnaping trial is broadcast, A. B. S. will present the entire proceedings.

Columbia and N. B. C. are "prepared to ask permission to place microphones in the courtroom," but A. B. S., the only network with a station in Trenton, WTNJ, has completed all preparations and is now awaiting the decision from New Jersey officials. Permission has not been granted at this writing to any station or chain.

A. B. S. quietly started negotiations September 20, the same day it was publicly announced that Hauptmann was under arrest. And this eight-station underdog was the only network to broadcast from New York police headquarters during the Hauptmann questioning last week . . . and the only organization to establish broadcasting facilities in the Bronx County courthouse, where the grand jury indicted the German carpenter.

THEY pulled the curtain and amber spots lit up the smiling faces of Ben Bernie's lads greeting a capacity audience yesterday at the Fox's first show. Bernie (call me Colonel) was lurking in the wings, fiddle beneath arm and cigar in jaw.

"Hello, Washington, how's the radio business? Yowsah!", muttered the old maestro as he added, out of the side of his mouth, that he was putting on John King, a young barytone, for the first time on any stage. King comes from Covington, Ky., and Bernie says he's a "find."

High light of the act . . . Bernie fiddling a solo of "Just a Song at Twilight," as his stogie puffed clouds into the rafters. And the gags are good . . . people laugh in the right places.

About his Tuesday night broadcast from the Raleigh Hotel . . . all guest tickets will be handled by his sponsors . . . not by N. B. C. who will make the pick-up at 9 p. m. And speaking of the show the maestro said:

"We wanted to get guest artists. But guest artists have been done to death. It's made it impossible for us to get a legitimate star for under $50. So we will give blue ribbons and a boost now and then. We hope to be able to give a shove to the near-great who are not exactly stars."

By this time Bernie had shed his dinner jacket, donned a blue dressing gown and another cigar.

"You know your Arthur Godfrey," he puffed, 'is a lad with a lotta talent and a swell voice. When I met him three years ago I knew he had something coming to him."

THE Voice of Experience announced over the air recently that information was wanted about alleged "racket" schools in the radio field. As spokesman for a committee of radio stars interested in bringing to light facts about the so-called training of unknowns for radio, the Voice is disappointed in the response.

Within a week after his announcement only 400 gullibles had written to him telling the facts about their being "gypped."

Evidence presented to the committee, composed, among others, of Johnny Green, Mark Warnow and Everett Marshall, has convinced it that it was on the right trail and that many talentless individuals are being charged cold cash for instruction when they really have nothing to develop.

"I know from the mail I have received and from talking to musicians in the studios that the condition we believe existed does exist," the Voice said. "After this lack of interest in our work on the part of the listening public, I am inclined to believe that Barnum was right."

Continuing the campaign of the antiracket school committee, the Voice will tell young hopefuls the trials gone through by several of radio's great during his broadcast on October 7 at 6:45 p. m. over C. B. S. nets. The Voice has proved himself a pretty wise person. It will be worth your while to listen to him on this subject.

TONIGHT the ubiquitous Bill Coyle will try his hand at a new role . . . that of master of ceremonies at the inaugural dedication of an escalator in Hecht's department store.

WRC will carry an address by Jesse Jones, chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, which will go on during the ceremonies at 8 p. m. Incidental entertainment will be provided by the Hecht Glee Club, Sidney's 11-piece band and by Pietro Gianfellia, barytone.

Ripples.

Now that the yacht races are over, the United States Navy Band will have its full hour of "Memories" Monday at 11 a. m. from WRC. Programs were cut to a quarter hour during the races. . . . The crucial Cincinnati-St. Louis baseball battle will be aired this afternoon from 4 to 6 p. m. by WRC. Bill Coyle will give a telegraphic play-by-play account. . . . Roxy's new "ear pictures" tonight at 7 p. m. on WJSV will include "On Parade," a history of the march, and "Red Man," a suite representation of the American Indian. . . . A full hour of favorite melodies of ten years ago and today will feature the tenth birthday celebration of station WEEI, N. B. C. affiliate in Boston, with ceremonies on the air at 7 p. m., WRC. . . . Plenty of color, excitement and the fun of the great Oktoberfest in Munich, Germany, will be aired today at 4:30 p. m. on WRC. A portable mike will visit beer tents, interview children and adult spectators and listen to barkers as they add to the happy hullabaloo.

U. S. Women Trim British 5 Out of 6 Singles to Retain Curtis Cup

By Dave Herman.

THE Curtis Cup, emblematic of international women's golfing supremacy, will remain in the United States for two more years.

This was determined yesterday at Chevy Chase's course when the crack American team defeated Great Britain's stars in five of the six singles matches to rout the invaders by 6½ points to 2½.

ORCUTT.

VAN WIE.

Held to a tie in the Scotch foursomes, and apparently anxious to redeem themselves for their poor showing of the opening day, the Yankee lassies played true to form yesterday and came mighty close to making a clean sweep in the singles.

Mrs. J. B. Walker, the famous Irish internationalist, saved John Bull's golfing daughters from a complete whitewashing when she conquered Mrs. Frank Goldthwaite, of Fort Worth, Tex., the former Aniela Gorczyc, 3 and 2, in the final match of the day.

Mrs. Walker Wins.

The scene on the sixteenth green, where Mrs. Walker, the live-wire of the British, whose exceptional wit and humor have made her a popular figure for the two-day competition, ended her battle with Mrs. Goldthwaite, was particularly dramatic from a British standpoint.

Assembled around this green were five of her vanquished comrades, all cheerful even in defeat cheering their hearts out for the only member of the team who had a chance to win a match during the day.

When Mrs. Walker knocked in her putt for a par 5 to beat Mrs. Goldwaithe's 6, the entire British team, led by Capt. Doris Chambers, rushed onto the green, smothered her with kisses, and did a war dance.

America's single triumphs were accounted for by Virginia Van Wie, of Chicago, National champion; Maureen Orcutt, of Englewood, N. J.; Mrs. Leon Cheney, of San Gabriel, Calif.; Charlotte Glutting, of West Orange, N. J., and Mrs. Opal Hill, of Kansas City.

Miss Van Wie, who seldom changes her expression on the course, so determined is she with every shot, turned back the challenge of Diana Fishwick, 1930 British champion, 2 and 1 in the feature match.

After being one down at the turn, Miss Van Wie made a gallant comeback on the back nine, to blast the hopes of the No. 1 star of the English forces. The National champion, finding herself after a ragged start, shot the last eight holes in only one over par.

Miss Orcutt Brilliant.

Four times Metropolitan champion and star of the Scotch foursome matches, Miss Orcutt played brilliantly against Molly Gourlay, veteran English golfer, winning, 4 and 2, after shooting the 16 holes in four over par. One down at the fourth, the New Jersey girl took the next six holes to reach the turn 5 up—a lead which Miss Gourlay found impossible to overcome.

Seventeen-year-old Pam Barton was no match for Mrs. Cheney, bowing by 7 and 5 before the withering blast unleashed by the Californian on the last five holes. Going out in 42 and standing 3 up, Mrs. Cheney shot the next four holes in one under par, winning each hole, and shattering the young British girl's hopes on the thirteenth green. It was the most decisive victory of the day for the Americans. Mrs. Cheney finished three over par, while Miss Barton, runner-up for the British title, was way off her game.

The most consistent golf of the day was provided by Charlotte Glutting, who conquered Wanda Morgan, 3 and 2. Three up at the turn after capturing the first 3 holes, Miss Glutting refused to crack, although Miss Morgan won the tenth and twelfth to make the match more interesting. Miss Glutting finished strong, climaxing the battle with a beautiful birdie 4 on the sixteenth hole.

Miss Glutting Victor.

Miss Glutting, out in 40, 2 over par, wound up the 16 holes 2 over par. Many were of the opinion she shot the best golf of the day in the face of stubborn opposition, such as that supplied by Miss Morgan.

Mrs. Hill won from Diana Plumpton, 3 and 2, overcoming the pretty British girl's opening-hole lead to sweep into a 2-up majority at the end of 9 holes. After playing poorly around the green most of the day, Mrs. Hill found her putting touch on the 424-yard fifteenth, where she rolled in a spectacular 25-footer for a birdie 4 to become dormie 3.

Mrs. Goldthwaite's game, weak for the first eleven holes, deprived America of a clean sweep of the singles. The young Texan topped or smothered most of these shots for the first eleven holes, weakly played her chips, and putted time and again short or wide of the hole.

She took a 2 up lead after four holes, but Mrs. Walker fought back, capturing the fifth and sixth to square the match. They reached the turn all even. Mrs. Walker won the twelfth when Mrs. Goldthwaite 3-putted, and she took the thirteenth when Mrs. Goldthwaite's tee shot found a sand trap. Mrs. Walker sank a 6-foot putt on the sixteenth to end the battle, taking a 5 to Mrs. Goldthwaite's 6.

The Fishwick-Van Wie match at-

Walker Signed To Fight Here This Fall

Joe Turner Is Angling for Schmeling as Foe in November.

By Bill McCormick.

MICKEY WALKER, New Jersey Toy Terrier, will hit the long heavyweight comeback trail in Washington some time in November against an opponent not yet decided upon, but probably to be Max Schmeling.

Walker has definitely agreed to box for Promoter Joe Turner, who plans to stage the bout in the Washington Auditorium. Negotiations are pending with Joe Jacobs, manager of Schmeling, who has been offered a $15,000 guarantee. Jacobs is understood to be viewing the proposal with favor in New York, but may defer definite acceptance until he can consult with his fighter, now in Germany.

Lou Diamond, Walker's recently acquired manager, who visited Washington yesterday to survey the Auditorium before agreeing to allow his charge to box here, is leaving today for New York to confer with Jacobs.

Would Seek Another Fighter.

In the event that Jacobs declines the bout for the Black Uhlan, some other opponent will be named for Walker. Natie Brown, ranking local heavyweight; Marty Gallagher, the Foggy Bottom fisticuffer, and Bob Tow, the Alexandria Adonis, are under consideration as alternates for Herr Schmeling.

Revision of the seating arrangements at the Auditorium can increase its capacity to 8,000, Turner and Diamond agreed yesterday. If Schmeling is signed for the bout, the prices will be scaled from $15 down, under the present plan.

Walker and Schmeling fought at the Madison Square Garden Long Island Bowl in New York in 1932, attracting a gate in excess of $200,000. The Toy Terrier made a startling rally after being bounced about the canvas like a ping pong ball for two rounds, acquiring a commanding lead which was wiped out completely when Schmeling opened two cuts in the eighth round, leaving Walker's seconds no alternative but to toss in the towel.

Has Lost Two Fights.

After the Walker victory, Schmeling was stopped by Max Baer and trounced by Steve Hamas. He recently scored an upset over Walter Neusel, whom he knocked out before some 100,000 people in a battle at Hamburg for the German heavyweight championship.

Football Season in Full Sway Today

Major Teams Expect Easy Contests

Pitt and W. & J. to Clash in Eastern Feature; Stanford in Debut.

By Jack Cuddy.

THEY'LL turn on the burners beneath the gridiron today, somewhat mildly of course, but with sufficient heat to cook up a spicy potpourri of football games which should prove mighty stimulating to fans' appetites for the more robust menus to come.

Most of the important football colleges which swing into action have pushovers for opponents. However, there are several encounters sprinkled about the country which will be watched closely as tip-off contests on potential headliners. A few may develop into smashing battles.

The four feature games appear to be Pittsburgh vs. Washington and Jefferson, at Pittsburgh; Northwestern vs. Marquette, at Evanston, Ill.; Stanford vs. Santa Clara, at Palo Alto, Calif., and Louisiana State vs. Rice, at Houston, Tex.

Violent Athletics for Youths Harmful Later, Data Shows

CLEVELAND, Sept. 28 (AP).—Statistics to indicate that violent athletics for boys 13 to 15 years of age may permanently impair bodily development and make them smaller men than they might have been are about to be submitted to the Nation's educators.

The evidence, being gathered by Floyd A. Rowe, director of physical welfare in Cleveland's public schools, tends to refute, he says, the widespread belief that games like football develop young boys into big, strong men.

Rowe bases his conclusions on a six-year collection of measurements of athletes and non-athletes in the junior high schools of this city.

Confining his criticism to such highly competitive sports as football, basket ball, and track contests, Rowe says games and exercise less violent and less stimulating to the emotions may be played with benefit, regardless of the boy's age.

But for the highly competitive sports, the director believes, it would be well for the boys to wait until they have passed the 13 to 15 year old age, which he describes as the period of greatest growth.

A typical set of Rowe's statistics, obtained at Fairmount Junior High School, shows the difference in two years in the growth of 30 boys who engaged in violent athletics and 30 boys who were nonathletes or who merely engaged in "non-exhibition" sports:

	Non-Athletes.	Athletes
Average weight at start (pounds)	116.	112.4
Average gain in two years..	18.65	17.75
Average weight after two years	134.65	130.15
Average height at start (inches)	62.8	63.7
Average gain in two years.	3.06	1.27
Average height after two years	65.86	64.97
Average gain in lung capacity (units)	45.	21.

Rowe's explanation of his belief that a part of the apparent impairment of bodily development is permanent is based on the fact that growth of the body is limited by a process called "calcification of the epiphysis"—the hardening of the cartilage at the end of the bones.

This process increases rapidly after the fifteenth year, and reduces the chance, Rowe says, of a youth to make up in bodily growth any of the ground he previously may have lost.

The Cleveland school's director of physical welfare is continuing his investigation with a more elaborate set of measurements this fall, and in another year hopes to be able to submit a much broader and more certain conclusion from his study.

Betty Carstairs Shuns Publicity; Hides on Island

LONDON, Sept. 28 (AP).—Betty Carstairs, British sportswoman, confirmed reports today that she is deserting England for a lonely "private" island in the Bahamas, asserting "I want to be left alone."

"There was a time when I could not live my own life," she said. "I could not get away from publicity. Well, that is all over. I am not going to race in America. I am not going to race anywhere any more. Now I just want to be left alone."

Miss Carstairs, a noted powerboat racer, appeared highly indignant at published reports she was forced into exile by the burden of taxation.

Players Are Apprehensive Over Starting Rowe in Cold Weather.

DETROIT, Sept. 28 (AP).—Keeping their eyes on the weather forecasts, the champion Detroit Tigers spent an open date today individually and collectively hoping that the sun will be shining warmly when they take the field for the first world series game.

"Come on, you sun" is the plea voiced by the American League champions, and although Manager Mickey Cochrane says he isn't worried about what effect cold weather might have on his club, a majority of the players are apprehensive over what effect chill winds

Giants Uneasy, Dodgers Primed for Vengeance

By Edward J. Neil.

STENGEL.

But tomorrow, on that quiet field, the Giants and the Brooklyn Dodgers will churn the turf in the first of two games that will close out the National League season here, perhaps decide definitely whether the defending champions or the St. Louis Cardinals face the Detroit Tigers in the world series. Or the Cards and the Giants may be forced into a three-game playoff series for the pennant, just as the Giants and Cubs battled in 1908 in a post-season game for the right to meet Detroit in the world series.

Shakier than ever in the face of the Brooklyn ghost, there was no possibility that the Giants could settle the issue before Sunday's final game.

Brooklyn Is Primed.

Brooklyn was more than ready for its part in tomorrow's drama, while the Giants, in the throes of a hitting slump, nerves ragged and tempers slipping, was never more poorly prepared. Brooklyn has been looking forward to this day ever since Bill Terry, addressing newspapermen last winter when

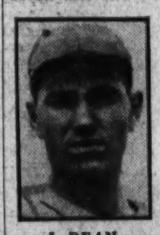
Dizzy Fans 7 Men In His 6th Shut-Out

ST. LOUIS, Sept. 28 (AP).—Jerome Herman (Dizzy) Dean pitched the St. Louis Club into a tie with the idle New York Giants for the National League lead with a 4-to-0 shutout of the Cincinnati Reds today.

Pitching with only two days of rest, Dean made the Reds look like the dizzy ones as he limited them to seven hits and struck out one for every blow. His victory was his twenty-ninth of the season, against seven defeats, and his sixth shutout.



J. DEAN.

St. Louis has two more games against the Reds and Manager Frank Frisch plans to keep tossing Deans at the tailenders until they are ready to cry quits. Paul (Dazzy) Dean, Dizzy's younger brother, is slated for mound duty tomorrow, and if that doesn't put the Cards ahead Dizzy will try it again Sunday. The Giants' two games are against an aroused band of Brooklyn Dodgers.

So effectively did the elder Dean pitch today that only four Cincinnati runners got as far as second base and the Reds never succeeded in getting two hits in any one inning. Jim Bottomley got to the keystone corner in the second on a single and a sacrifice, Gordon Slade reached the same spot in the same way in the fourth; Adam Comorosky doubled to start the eighth and got no farther when Dizzy retired three men in short order and Harlin

Labrot Entry 2d and 3d In Race

Martin Colt Wins Over Little Dinah, Toolbox in Bayou Purse.

By Walter Haight
(Post Staff Correspondent).

HAVRE DE GRACE RACE TRACK, Sept. 28.—S. W. Labrot, Maryland sportsman and master of the largest horse racing establishment in this State, sent two smart and speedy juveniles postward here this afternoon. J. W. Y. Martin, also a Maryland sportsman, sent one smart and speedy juvenile postward. Martin might have been outnumbered, but he was not outrun for Truly Yours from his stable won today's feature race in a driving finish with Labrot's entry of Toolbox and Little Dinah.

The race was the Bayou Purse, a 5½-furlong dash for Maryland-bred 2-year-olds. Truly Yours was only lightly considered in the wagering and rewarded with a $21.30 mutuel.

Betting Is Brisk.

The betting was some of the most brisk of the meeting. Everybody and his cousin visited the various booths and it seemed that 99 44-100 of the crowd insisted on backing the Labrot entry. There was a fair play on Gunwale, one that made him second choice, but the bulk of the coin of the realm was placed on the chances of the Little Dinah-Toolbox combination. The odds shrunk to 80 cents on the dollar.

For most of the sprint, it appeared that the big money had been well placed. Little Dinah bounded out in front soon after the break and hotfooted along with rare speed. Jockey Hunter had the mount and he went to work with a will as he sensed the approach of a rival as the field swung toward the stretch. A horse moved up under the drive of Jockey Bejshak but it was Toolbox.

Jockey Rides Time.

The entry was now running one, two, with Truly Yours, from all appearances, a beaten and contented third. However, Jockey Knapp was only biding his time to make a move. Little Dinah and Toolbox were traveling as a team, with the finish close by, when Knapp finally roused Truly Yours into a sizzling drive. The colt had the punch. He gained at every jump and at the edge of the mutuel board it was anybody's race. A blanket would have covered the three as they thundered across the line. It was Truly Yours by a head, Little Dinah by a neck and Toolbox by a length over Gunwale.

Panthers, one of the perennial powers in Eastern football, again loom as one of the outstanding teams in the section. They face an unusually stiff schedule. Washington and Jefferson, at one time, could be counted upon to furnish plenty of competition for any outfit in the country. In recent years they have not done so well. But still W. and J. is no pushover, as Pitt's 9-to-0 victory proved last year.

The Northwestern-Marquette collision is the most important contest in the Midwest. Northwestern is expected to display Big Ten class and win, but probably after a smashing battle. The Wildcats are heavier and more experienced than last year, but Marquette is understood to have a smart, fighting team.

Stanford, the Pacific Coast champion of 1933, which met defeat by Columbia in the Rose Bowl, starts its season against comparatively stiff opposition in little, tough Santa Clara. The Indians should have one of the best squads in the country this year, but they'll probably get a good workout because Santa Clara always rounds rapidly into excellent shape early in the season.

L. S. U. Opposes Rice.

"Biff" Jones' Louisiana Staters, who came through the 1933 season unbeaten, although they suffered two ties, tackle the Rice Owls, whom they downed, 13-0, in their opening contest last year. Rice had a comparatively unsuccessful season last year, but reports indicate it is primed to do better.

There are several other interesting matches slated, which possibly may have more important results than the big four already mentioned. In the East, for example, Army's completely rebuilt cadets meet Washburn College of Topeka. Navy, heavier and stronger than in many years, opens its bid to wrest the service laurels from Army against William and Mary. The latter outfit has provided many surprises in the past. The Middies are inaugurating a brand-new system of graduate coaching under Lieut. Tom Hamilton.

Dartmouth in Debut.

Dartmouth, regarded by some observers as an Eastern dark horse, makes its debut under Earl Blaik, erstwhile Army assistant, with a new brand of play and a fine squad. It meets little Norwich at Hanover. The Duquesne-West Virginia traditional brawl should be mighty close. It will indicate what Duquesne may do under Joe Bach, who succeeded Elmer Layden.

With Bill Bennings.

Dear Al: Havre de Grace Race Track, Sept. 28.

It seems there comes a time in every man's life when he wants to become a movie star or a race horse selector. The screen companies receive thousands of letters from would-be Clark Gables, Robert Montgomerys and Spencer Tracys. My boss handles the correspondence of a great number who guarantee to pick more winners than there are races. Some say they have unbeatable systems, some are expert figure men, some claim to have stall information and others go in for reading the stars and crystal gazing. They sign a variety of names—Lucky Tom, Chief, Longshot Kid, Paddock Pat, Whip and Bugle, Stretch Drive, &c. Yesterday, for the first time at the meeting, I was shut out. That was the signal. Every would-be handicapper with money for a stamp made a dive for the job. Perhaps the most persistent of the group was "Happy Dee." After telling what a great fellow he was, "Happy Dee" made the fatal mistake of inclosing his selections for today. He picked two winners but the wrong day. Bennings, Inc., had four winners, two seconds and a third out of seven picks. Perhaps we shall hear more of "Happy Dee," but under a different name. It's a great job, fellows. Clocker Mike, Trainer Joe and I travel in a private car, each of us has a valet and we eat caviar at every meal. BILL.

First race—Stegal has run two nice races here, being beaten by Brown Twig a nose earlier in the week. Slight improvement would find this one outclassing the field. Hillse was in the money consistently in New York among cheap fields. Sun Lure might be third among these.

Second race—Red Wagon has shown a tendency to back up in all races this year. However, he drops down far enough here to take the edge. Dreel is rounding into form and will be dangerous. High Torque would go on top in the mud.

Third race—Corvine exhibited rare courage in gaining a nose victory here the other day and was expertly handled by Jockey Reid. This combination may repeat. Mad Eagle and Arab to take care of the others.

Fourth race—They will have Kate to beat in this field. She has been sprinting of late but is not averse to the longer route. Chatmoss has a splendid win as a recommendation and will be in the thick of the battle. Chartres to show.

Fifth race—Discovery carries the usual heavy impost, but is too much horse to be placed anywhere but on top. Thursday gets in with only 105 pounds and shapes up well. Clocker Mike has raved all afternoon about Hindu Queen's work. This filly won two in New York and is sharp as a tack.

Sixth race—Flagstone, Primute and St. Stephen is the order in which I prefer them here.

Seventh race—Zembla and Hut should battle it out for the main award here. Both are fit and ready. Olamay to gain the minor award.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—NAUTCH, $3.70, $3.20, $2.60; FIRETHORN, $7.20, $3.70; SOLDIERS DREAM, $3.00.

NAUTCH, rushed up between horses to enter a forward position in the opening furlong, swung to the outside of leaders when reaching the home stretch, wore down SOLDIERS DREAM and just lasted. FIRETHORN gained fast when reaching the home stretch, made a wide turn, but closed full of run. SOLDIERS DREAM raced SAINT CLEO into submission after a half-mile, saved ground, but weakened fast.

SECOND RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $800; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won easily; place, driving. Went to post at 2:45. Off at 2:47½. Winner, W. G. Merion's ch. g. Two-dollar mutuels paid—DORNOCH, $2.90, $2.60, $2.20; JACK LOW, $4.30, $2.60; BLACK SONG, $2.50.

DORNOCH, in hand until leaving the back stretch, took command at his leisure, opened up a winning lead when straightened into the home stretch and finished with speed in reserve. JACK LOW, outrun for the first half-mile, closed gamely. BLACK SONG, steadied in front while setting the pace, weakened steadily during the closing drive.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—TRULY YOURS, $21.30, $6.00, $3.70; TOOLBOX (entry), $2.40, $2.70; LITTLE DINAH (entry), $2.70.

TRULY YOURS, following in near attendance of the leaders in the early stages, was forced to come to the outside while increasing his speed and, in a game finish, was up in the closing strides. TOOL BOX tip-toed to reach a forward position in the opening furlong, was much used in racing LITTLE DINAH into submission and could not withstand the winner's rush. LITTLE DINAH held on gamely after showing good speed.

FOURTH RACE—One mile and 70 yards. Purse, $800; claiming. For 3-year-olds. Start good. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 3:45. Off at 3:47½. Winner, R. L. Hume's br. g. (3), by Sickle—Triangle. Trained by owner. Value to winner, $625; second, $100; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 1:45.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—TRIANGULAR, $5.20, $3.10, $2.60; SQUEEZE OUT, $3.00, $2.40; OUR DAVID, $3.40.

TRIANGULAR, allowed to find his best stride before engagement with the leaders, went up on the outside midway of the final turn, came strongly to wrest command from OUR DAVID, then came out nicely. SQUEEZE OUT, rated off the pace for six furlongs, was shaken up strongly and came again near the end. OUR DAVID, away quickly, had nice speed while setting the pace, but tired after being straightened out.

FIFTH RACE—One and one-eighth miles. Purse, $800; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won ridden out; place, driving. Went to post at 4:13. Off at 4:15½. Winner, Mrs. C. Two-dollar mutuels paid—PASS SHOT, $5.60, $3.90, $3.00; MANAGER BILL, $7.70, $5.20; CHATTERDOO, $4.40.

PASS SHOT, kept on the outside of his opponents after trailing back of leaders, moved up fast in the last half-mile, circled his field to displace the pacemakers, then came away under pressure. MANAGER BILL, rated in closest pursuit of CHATTERDOO, held on willingly after making a stout bid. CHATTERDOO set a fast early pace, saved ground and continued gamely.

GOLD AND BLACK disposed of JUSTA TEACHER without effort midway of the back stretch, saved ground while in front, but could not stay when pressed. LEGENDARY moved up in determined fashion when reaching the final turn, but was held safe in the closing drive. INFILEE closed a good gap. CHEROKEE SAL fell back after reaching the back stretch, then was unable to offer contention.

DIGNIFIED, in trouble going to first turn, gained steadily when in his stride and continued to make up ground nearing end. SHASTA STAR closed gamely.

Virginia Ready For Hampden Invasion

Two Washington Boys in Cavalier's Line for Today's Game.

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va., Sept. 28 (Spl.).—The Virginia eleven selected to repel Hampden-Sydney's invasion tomorrow afternoon put in a strenuous practice session today in preparation for what is expected to be one of the most severe tests ever offered a Cavalier team in an opening game.

While during the 47 seasons of Cavalier football none of the smaller State schools have been able to gain a victory in inaugural contests, tie games have resulted lately with increasing regularity. Hampden-Sydney battled the Virginians to a 7-to-7 draw last fall, and it is feared here that this year's warm-up affair may produce cold chills.

Two former Washington boys, Bob Spaulding, from Georgetown Prep, and Al Seccombe, former Landon School back, are slated to start in the Cavalier line. Spaulding, Seccombe and Randy Garnett, quarter back, are the only non-letter men named on the starting team.

The probable line-ups with weights:

Virginia.	Position.	Hamp.-Syd.

might have on the arm of one Schoolboy Rowe.

Manager Cochrane recently announced Rowe would pitch the first game, but reports persisted today that Alvin (General) Crowder, obtained from Washington recently, would draw the starting assignment. Crowder has been in fine form, and cold weather has not bothered him.

Rowe, in his own words, "must warm up right to be right." He wasn't right Thursday against the Chicago White Sox, who handed him his eighth loss of the year, and many fans are fearful that Rowe, to equal his sensational performance of this summer, must have warm weather to "be right" during the series.

The schoolboy, who just a few days ago said he wasn't nervous, today was just a bit apprehensive, and the feeling was spreading. Powe recollects that almost all of his defeats came on cold days, especially the setback he suffered in Philadelphia when the Mackmen shattered his winning streak at 16 games.

A majority of the Tigers are Southerners and would like to have it boiling hot when the series opens. The club started slowly in the spring, fans point out, started playing winning ball when the hot weather began, and then hit a mild slump when September winds began to whisk leaves from the trees.

Giants Uneasy

be known, answered thusly a query regarding the Dodgers' prospects:

"Brooklyn?" he asked coyly, puffing smoke from a big seegar, "are they still in the National League?"

Casey Stengel, manager of the Dodgers, looks like a man who has struck oil while digging for water. Terry is worrying silently in his lair, probably wondering why, oh why, he ever let his tongue slip. The Brooklyns have sixth place cinched. They're looser than ashes.

Won't Betray Trust.

"I have a mandate from my people," says Casey solemnly, his eyes gleaming. "I will not betray my trust to Brooklyn. We are not taking the Giants lightly. They have a pretty good ball club. I feel that I must use my pitchers, Van Mungo and Ray Benge, to insure victory. My people have spoken. The Dodgers are ready."

There are telegrams and letters a foot high on Casey's desk. All pleas for vengeance.

The Giants went through three hours of batting and fielding practice today. Young Roy Parmelee was Terry's choice to pitch tomorrow's game, Fred Fitzsimmons the selection for Sunday. Weather prospects were fair, with a chance for late showers tomorrow. Pouring rain alone will stop the games. The gates open at noon both days.

Maryland-St. John's and G. W.-Shepherd Games Hold Interest of Fans Here Today

Terps Expect Tough Time In First

Colonials, on Contrary, Likely to Experience Little Trouble.

By Lewis F. Atchison.

THE new, 1934 streamlined models of George Washington U. and Maryland football machines will be wheeled out before the customers' eager eyes this afternoon as the football season arrives—officially—for Washington grid fans.

George Washington's trial run will be made at Central High School over route No. 1, otherwise known as Shepherd College. Maryland's unveiling ceremonies are scheduled for Byrd Stadium, College Park, where it faces St. John's. The games start at 2:30 o'clock.

Figures on Easy Victory.

With a heavier shock-absorbing and dispensing line than it boasted last year and a backfield embodying the principal features of knee-action, George Washington figures to wallop the little West Virginia team by more touchdowns than you can count on one hand. G. W.'s front line will average close to 190 pounds and the backfield about 175.

There will be many new faces in the G. W. line-up this afternoon, almost entirely different from the team that stamped a 27-0 defeat on Catawba in the 1933 opener. Not a single back who started the Catawba game—Baker, Carlin, Finis Parish or Bomba will be in action. In their stead will be Leemans, a flashy broken field runner and three sophomores, Frank Kavalier, Bill Brewer and Ray Hanken.

The new faces in the line will be those of Sid Kolker and Hank Strayer, guards, and Ed Clark, tackle. Bill Parrish and Arnold Benefield, ends; Harry Deming, tackle, and Red Rathjen, center, are veterans.

New faces will dominate the Maryland line-up also, although only one of last season's regulars is missing from the Terp squad. Johnny Gormley, soph full back and Norwood Sothoron, who did not play last year, will team with Dick Nelson and George Sachs in the back field.

In the line will be Al Farrel, a guard who was out last year, Bill Andorka, center, and John Birkland, tackle, also newcomers, and Lou Ennis, Bernie Buscher, ends; Johnny Simpson, guard, and Carl Stalfort, tackle.

Task More Difficult.

Maryland's task is decidedly more difficult than George Washington's for little St. John's is small in name only and perfectly capable of upsetting the Faber-coached machine. This is one warm-up that should be hot. Who's getting warmed up for who is rather vague at this writing.

Four Washington boys, Angus Lamond, Ed and Leonard Delisio and Gordon Boucher will play with St. John's. The Johnnies dispensed with their one-year residence ruling this season and will have the benefit of a rather husky crop of freshmen, which should be a large advantage in a close game.

Maryland defeated the Bay City eleven, 20-0, to open its 1933 campaign and it should repeat today, though not by as comfortable a margin.

Washington and Lee Puts Over Touchdown in Closing Period.

A BIG, powerful Washington and Lee High School eleven wrestled a stubborn Gonzaga High School team to a 6-0 victory yesterday afternoon at Ballston in the season's opener for both teams.

In view of the General's possessing one of the strongest teams in years, Coach Orrel Mitchell's proteges went home not entirely dissatisfied by their performance. The Virginians, outweighing the Washington prep school boys several pounds per man, finally scored over their tiring opponents late in the fourth quarter.

A Gonzaga fumble in the second period was recovered by Washington and Lee after the Washington team had penetrated deep into their opponents' territory. The visitors were unable to threaten seriously thereafter.

Superior Weight Tells.

The two elevens fought on even terms until the final period, when the superior weight of the home team began to tell. They began to literally overpower the Purple and a hard-running and passing attack carried 70 yards to a touchdown.

Birch started it off by throwing a long pass to Blake, who was tackled on the Georgetown 40-yard line. Birch then shot around right end for 25 more and the ball was on the Gonzaga 15. An off-tackle smash, again by Birch, netted 12 yards, and the same player went over from the 3-line mark.

Two State Title Games Today In Virginia

Three Intersectional Tilts, Involving V.P.I., W. & L., W. & M. Slated.

RICHMOND, Va., Sept. 28 (AP).—A couple of State championship games, a tough Southern Conference engagement and important intersectional battles will offer a variety of attractions for the Old Dominion's football faithful tomorrow.

All of the State's 11 elevents will go into action except Emory and Henry's Wasps who played Elon tonight.

Virginia Military's Cadets will battle Duke's great team at Lexington.

Other games within the State will pit Richmond's Spiders against Roanoke at Richmond; Virginia against Hampden-Sydney at Charlottesville and Randolph-Macon against Langley Field at Langley Field.

Two New Coaches.

In two of these games new head coaches will be watched critically by the alumni forces, with both of them expecting tough battles from underdog elevens. At Richmond Glenn Thistlethwaite will send a well-trained eleven, reinforced by capable reserves, into action against a Roanoke eleven which probably will be playing without the services of Rip Patrone, star quarter back whose shoulder injury is still troubling him. Virginia, under Gus Tebell, is anticipating no end of trouble from a courageous and stubborn Hampden-Sydney team which may present a forewall capable of playing the Cavaliers to a standstill. The Tigers earned a tie last season.

Randolph-Macon, Chesapeake Conference champions a year ago, but apparently much weaker this season, may find Langley Field's robust eleven too strong.

Intersectional battles will carry the well wishers of the State's faithful to Philadelphia, where Virginia Tech battles Temple; to Lexington, Ky., where Washington and Lee plays Kentucky, and to Annapolis, where William and Mary's little band of Indians will clash with Navy's strong eleven.

W. & L. Faces Kentucky.

Washington and Lee, whose fighting Generals upset Kentucky last season by the margin of a single touchdown, will miss the services of Tubby Owings, giant tackle, who is nursing a leg injury. They are given no better than an even chance, while Tech and William and Mary will have distinctly underdog roles. The Indians, always a stern foe for Navy, apparently are well below their usual strength.

Bridgewater's Eagles, picking their opponents with more care this season, may continue the evidence of a football revival which was indicated last season. The Eagles open against Catawba at Salisbury, N. C.

Blue Ridge Plans Six-Club League

Teams Authorized to Deal With Majors for "Farms."

Hagerstown, Md., Sept. 28 (Spl.).—An effort to interest major league or Class AA clubs in Blue Ridge League teams next season, so that the league may again enter organized ball, was the decision at the meeting here at which the affairs for the 1934 season were closed.

Another town will also be sought in order that the circuit may become a six-club one.

The clubs were authorized to negotiate with major or Class AA clubs in regard to selling or optioning their teams, with the requirement that at least $1,200 be deposited by the purchasing or optioning club.

Western High Eleven, in Impressive Debut, Gallops to 27-0 Victory Over St. John's

Summerbell Is Star of Driving Attack; Team Seen Series Threat.

SOME 2,000 Western High students watched Coach Dan Ahearn unwrap his 1934 football team yesterday in Western Stadium and bring to light about half a dozen prizes which even he wasn't sure were in the package. The discovery occurred while Western was opening its season with a 27-to-0 victory over St. John's Prep.

The four-touchdown victory gave the followers of the Georgetown school plenty to cheer over, but more important than the score was the abundant supply of Western backfield power uncovered.

From the standpoint of Western's interhigh rivals this unexpected ball-carrying strength puts the series race in an entirely different light. The Western line was expected to be strong, with four crack veterans returning to school. But not so the backfield, where Bill Summerbell was the only 1933 regular back in uniform.

Summerbell shone yesterday, but he had to share the honors with Phil Maloney, a peach of a passer; Jack Hasley, full back; Logan Owens, half back, and Eddie Seymour, quarter back. These four, all newcomers to regular positions, proved that Coach Ahearn has little to worry about as regards his backfield power.

V. M. I., Picked as Best Team In State, Plays Duke Today

(The following is the fourth of a series of articles dealing with football prospects at major Virginia colleges.)

By Shirley L. Povich
(Sports Editor, The Post).

LEXINGTON, Va., Sept. 28.—There's goals in them thar heels the pony backs of V. M. I. will show the opposition this season.

Virginia Military Institute is going back on the goal standard in football during the coming campaign, or this observer is setting a new free-style record for astigmatism.

Coach Bill Raftery, a tyke of a man himself, with a brogue as thick as last week's mulligan stew, has the 11 best football players in Virginia. Ah, but there's the rub. Beyond those 11, the caliber of the V. M. I. squad declines like a snowball in Hades.

V. M. I.'s football stock will boom in direct proportion to the absence of injuries. Raftery's reserves are numerically strong and physically weak. And therein hangs the fate of V. M. I.

Plays Duke Today.

They won't be long now in learning just how cleverly that little back field and big line of Raftery's can conduct themselves. Right off the bat, tomorrow afternoon, to be exact, the Cadets find themselves confronted with Duke, the team that is the unanimous choice to win the Southern Conference title.

V. M. I. doesn't figure to beat the big, rugged Duke team in the game that is scheduled here, but if the V. M. I. line shakes loose a couple of those tiny backs, and indications are that it will, the Dukes will need at least a couple of touchdowns.

Put them all together and the V. M. I. back field averages 165 pounds. But the lads who will be marked men are a little 142-pounder by the name of Bo McMillin, a first cousin of Center College's immortal, and a lad who answers to the handle of Dick Dodson, whose 154 pounds belie his linecrack prowess.

McMillin and Dodson will commence operations from a newly patented huddle-shift of Raftery's that breathes deception, what with the squad taking its position on the offense after a South Sea Island ritual that sees them go through mysterious paces that would befuddle Houdini in his salad days.

Like his namesake, the original "Bo," young McMillin takes his 142 pounds through tackle and around the ends on a crazy course that annihilates the yardage. His running mate, Dodson, will attend to the line bucking, despite his 152 pounds.

No slouches, either, are Tucker Watkins, the 186-pound No. 2 back, and Wayt Clark, the other 178-pound half back. Young Mr. Watkins is just about the finest blocker in Viringia colleges, and Clark, from Roanoke, has the equipment to implant himself solidly in the forefront of all the ball carriers if he chooses to play football right up to the hilt.

Little McMillin will call signals for the gang. He will do most of the punting and help Clark with the passing. Something of a triple threat. Too bad he can't cook.

That about washes up the back field talent at V. M. I. John Penn, a fine punter, and Meredith Urich are wishing the first four no hard luck, but it will require injuries or a runaway score to get these two in the ball game.

There was a deal of room for improvement in that V. M. I. team of last year. They managed to beat Maryland and Virginia, and tied V. P. I., but they were bumped off by Duke, and such as Emory and Henry, Richmond, and William and Mary, which was no showing to write the folks about.

But things are looking up at V. M. I. The line that Raftery will put in front of that back field will average 188 pounds from end to end, and no softies are they. But here again, the bugaboo of substitutes rears a head as ugly as Lon Chaney's most frightful creation.

Outside of the guards, Raftery hasn't a reserve lineman to be mentioned in the same breath with his regulars and the situation in that respect is as acute as the embarassment of a couple of marriages that didn't run concurrently.

The big shot in the V. M. I. line is literally big—one Carlyle Lowe, a 245-pound tackle who gets about with the speed of Barney Ross. Lowe likes his work. He takes great delight in ripping open the entire right side of the enemy line, and frequently does. For a running mate he'll have Russell Coleman, a good journeyman tackle. For a substitute, he'll have nobody of much account.

Raftery's ends had better be good. Outside of 6-foot-2 Charley Hancock, who plucks passes out of the air like they plucked that $50,000 from Jafsie; and Temple Ryan, a still better man on the defense, V. M. I. has no ends, unless he is willing to take a chance on three 1933 freshmen, Kane, Adams and Haas, who are as green as yesterday's corn likker.

All of which brings us down to the guards. Here Raftery smiles in contemplation. Jim Farley, a Richmond Democrat who is but a sophomore, is a better guard than John Burgess, also a veteran from last year. They are the guards. But ready to oust either of them from a regular job is Fenton Riley, just a fair full back last year who has found his proper niche in life as a guard this season. He's the sensation of the pre-season practice. Then there's Bill Oglesby, a 165-pounder, who will see more action than any other sub on the squad.

Central Gridmen Play Woodberry

To Encounter Second Rival in Three Days.

Central High School's grid team, still suffering from a 12-to-0 beating administered Thursday by a powerful Alexandria High eleven, takes on its second foe in three days this afternoon when it meets Woodberry Forest at Woodberry Forest, Va.

Central, 1933 scholastic championship team of Washington, is a slight favorite to defeat the Virginians.

Lane High Downs Culpeper, 32 to 7

Charlottesville, Va., Sept. 28 (Spl.).—Winning handily from Culpeper High's eleven here today, 32 to 7, Lane High's team made an impressive start under its new coach, Johnny Dial, of last year's Virginia team.

Scintillating in the back field were the Deane brothers, Bobby and Carl, each contributing two touchdowns. Consistent gains also were made by Disque and Maxcy. In all, the local eleven registered 15 first downs.

Culpeper's lone touchdown came near the close of the final quarter, when Coleman gathered up a blocked punt and raced 30 yards to score. Perry contributed the extra point on a plunge through center. The visitors completed three out of six passes for short gains.

Nats, Yankees In Twin Bill Today

Diggs and Cohen to Hurl; Rookies Dot Line-ups of Both Teams.

IT'LL be kid day at Griffith Stadium today.

The Yankees and the Nats will open their final series of the season with rookies dotting their line-ups from hither to yon—in a doubleheader that may give a good indication of what to expect in the early stages of next year's campaign.

Acting Manager Al Schacht of the Nats, who was elevated to his position for the rest of the season when Manager Joe Cronin took unto himself a bride on Thursday, announced yesterday that he would start a pair of rookie pitchers in today's games. Shortly after a brief workout at the stadium, Schacht conferred with himself and decided to give the call to young Reece Diggs, in the opening game, and to young Sid Cohen in the nightcap.

Has the Goods.

Diggs is the Pimlico, Md., lad who has hurled in three games for the Nats and has surrendered only 22 hits in 21 2-3 innings, which is some pitching in any man's league. Cohen, reformed Chattanooga first baseman, has given up 14 hits in the one game he has worked.

Suffering a losing streak of four straight games, the Nats will offer a slightly changed outfield line-up with Freddy Sington, Johnny Stone and Jake Powell patrolling the outer gardens. Heinie Manush, who led the league batting at one stage of play this year by some 20 percentage points, yesterday saw no chance to regain his lost laurels and left for his Detroit home, foregoing action for the rest of the season.

tracted the day's largest gallery, for it brought together outstanding stylists of both nations. Miss Van Wie, playing raggedly at the start, three-putted the first two greens to become 2 down. The American won the fourth with a par 3 when Miss Fishwick spanked her tee shot to the left of the trap. A trapped second cost Miss Fishwick the seventh, evening the match. On the ninth Miss Fishwick knocked her approach dead for a birdie 3 as Miss Van Wie made a poor approach, taking a 5 and conceding the hole.

One up at the turn, Miss Fishwick lost the short tenth to a par 3, the eleventh to a par 5 when she missed a brief putt, the thirteenth to a par 3 by hitting her tee shot short of the green. Now 2 up, Miss Van Wie played safe, approaching beautifully for the next three holes for halves, and recovering nicely from a trap on the seventeenth for another half to end the match.

10,000 to See Navy-W.-M. In Opener

Borries at Quarter Back; Middies Are Primed for Foe's Passes.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., Sept. 28 (Spl.).—Football at Navy will have its 1934 inaugural tomorrow when the Midshipmen line up against William and Mary College, and indications augur for a great battle for a starter.

A deal of rivalry exists between the opposing schools, as William and Mary has been sending its gridders to Annapolis for the last several years to furnish initial opposition for the Tars. In eight clashes since 1923, the Virginians succeeded in winning only one. That was in 1932, when they triumphed, 6 to 0.

Hamilton at Helm.

The Naval contingent awaits the opening with more than ordinary interest, because this year marks a return to a graduate system of coaching. At the helm is Lieut. Thomas J. Hamilton, star quarter back of Navy's National championship eleven in 1926, who has assembled about him several mates of that crack outfit and other Navy stars of recent years.

Anticipating that William and Mary will stress a passing game, with such fleet wingmen as Degutis and Zabel, much of the Middies' preparation for the battle has been devoted to pass-defensive work. Navy's big shots will be the veteran Buzz Borries, broken field star; his understudy, Johnny Schmidt, also adept along this line, and the punting and line-plunging Bill Clarke.

A brisk run through signals and the crop of plays comprised work done by the Middies in the drill today. Although Borries always has played as a half back, Navy mentors have assigned him the quarter back berth and he also will be the safety man. Thus far he has made a good field general and the arrangement may be permanent.

Two Regulars Out.

Two regulars—Zabriskie, right guard, and Robertshaw, center—are laid up by injuries. Otherwise, the Middies will have their full strength in the field.

The ticket sale indicates an attendance of at least 10,000. The kick off will be at 2:15. A game between the Navy plebes and Catholic University freshmen will start at 1 o'clock.

Episcopal High Will Oppose Eastern

Game Today Set for 3:30; Mighty Drills Held by Pirates.

ALEXANDRIA, Va., Sept. 28 (Spl.).—Episcopal High opens its football campaign here tomorrow afternoon, playing Eastern High, of Washington. The game is scheduled for Hoxton Field, beginning at 3:30 o'clock.

Coach Cardwell, of Episcopal, has a well-balanced line; alert, powerful and fast. The backs, with the exception of Hoxton, are green, but through hard work and regular practice they have rounded into a smooth-functioning machine. Rogerson will start at center. Burke and Harrison are dependable and steady guards. Overy and Wellford are the tackles. On the flanks, Coach Cardwell will have Boyce and Brown. Behind the line he has Duvall, quarter back; Hoxton and Wilson, halves, and Bryant, full back.

Nightly drills are being held by the Pirates, 135-pound city champions. Mike Goldman, former mentor, has resigned and his successor is Coodles Owens, veteran unlimited player. The Pirates also have a new manager, Dutch Wood, who has taken over the job held by Bill Hammond for the last five seasons. Wood is seeking games with teams from Washington, Richmond and Fredericksburg. He can be reached at Alexandria 835 by phone or by letter at 1103 Prince street, Alexandria.

The men who have reported for drills are Henry, Wingfield, Harrison, Massey, Fones, Hyland, Entwilse, Proctor, Cook, Robinson, Ennis, Bernheimer, Carter, Ramey, Shu, Trieger, Giles, Brown, Fields, Warden, Dyson and Brenner.

The Fraters, according to Nick Colosanto, new coach, are "going places" on the gridiron this season. The only worry Colosanto admits is the scarcity of reserve material in the line. Bob Agner and Park Bell are the only ends nearing form. Studds and Brenner will probably make the guard positions. Sutton and Turner are the most reliable of the half dozen tackles. Eddie Bayliss and Julian Whitestone will be relied upon to play the pivot post. The backfield is causing no bother. Dick Allen and Ellet Cabell are cocahing the backfield.

Wilson to Fight McCadon.

Bob Wilson and Jay McCadon will headline the Riding and Hunt Club program of punch scheduled for October 22, it was announced yesterday. Wilson was awarded a draw in a recent bout with McCadon, which the majority thought was won by the latter.

Schacht to Clown At World Series —All by Himself

CASTING aside his role as acting manager of the Nats, A. Schacht, comedian, today will begin preparations for the 1934 world series.

Veteran Mr. Schacht, who has missed only a couple of series in several years, stated yesterday that he would get his comedy act in tip-top shape for the large crowds that are sure to see the Detroit Tigers battle either the New York Giants or the St. Louis Cardinals in the '34 classic.

"I'm looking forward to it like a kid," said Veteran Mr. Schacht.

"I'll work alone," he added, with no reference to the breach that is keeping him from working with his erstwhile friendally Nick Altrock.

Giants, Not Cardinals, Deserve Flag for All-Season Form—Gallico

Detroit Favors N. Y. for World Series Foe, He Asserts.

By Paul Gallico.

THIS department wishes the best of luck to Will Terry and his Giants in the forthcoming trying games today and Sunday, and considerable bad cess to the Cardinals who seem to be winning this National League pennant as a sort of an afterthought.

The Giants have been playing hard, earnest baseball throughout the year and doing their level best to win the championship.

There is reason to believe that the Cardinals have not been as interested as they might have been in the acquisition of the pennant, due mainly to dissatisfaction with the salaries they have been receiving and the treatment accorded to them by their owners.

Playng Edge Is Missing.

There were the strikes of the Dean boys, Daffy and Dizzy, and three or four of the players have not exactly had their heart in their work. Not that they threw games, but merely that their playing edge was not as keen as it might have been.

The truth is that this year the St. Louis team is the best in the leagues and should have won the pennant by eight or nine games. This sudden afterthought of theirs becomes a great nuisance, gums up everybody's plans, and I, for one, sincerely hope nothing comes of it.

The Detroits have their hearts set on playing the New York team. The town is baseball mad, and all steamed up over the battle between the Giants and the Tigers. Nobody there cares about having St. Louis win—in fact the Tigers fear the Cards more than New York and certainly nobody much in St. Louis seems to care about anything connected with baseball.

Only some 4,000 people came out to see the Cards play against Cincinnati Thursday in a game counted vitally in their belated drive for the pennant.

A Financial Flop.

The world series would be something of a financial flop if played between Detroit and St. Louis. On the other hand, if the Giants and Tigers play, interest will be at fever heat, the parks will be packed and everybody will be happy. If the Cards and Tigers play, nobody will get much money out of it, and not many will care particularly who wins. Hooray for the Giants; down with the Cards! Come on you, Terry!

There is a curious feeling around in New York. People seem to be rooting for Terry to get licked. What strange people we are. How we envy champions, hate success, and pray for the titleholders' downfall. Terry has been a square shooter. He has given New York honest, good baseball. He built a pennant-wipning club out of a fifth-place team.

He lacks certain qualities that go toward making popularity, one of which is tact, but he still is the same Terry who was the hero of last year's pennant campaign and he is in a tough spot. I don't like to see guys kicked when they're down. He is no different from the Terry of last year. If he was good enough then to have the good wishes of the customers, he is this year, too.

Holds St. Louis Team Weak-Hearted Until Stretch Is Reached.

165 VOTES APART IN 1919— WHAT WILL IT BE IN 1934?

MARYLANDERS during the next few weeks will witness the bitterest, most desperate political battle in many an election. For this is more than the usual contest between Democrats and Republicans. It is a grudge fight, a struggle for vindication by a man who 15 years ago had his fingers on the Governorship of Maryland, only to have that prize slip away from him and to find himself thrust back into obscurity while his opponent became a National figure.

On one side of the impending clash is silver-haired, aristocratic Albert Cabell Ritchie, Governor of Maryland for the past 15 years. Challenging him is aggressive, hard-hitting Harry W. Nice, all his life forced to fight for everything he has achieved. And neither of these seasoned gladiators is pulling his punches.

The same two men were opponents for the Governorship in 1919 . . and when the smoke of that battle cleared away Mr. Ritchie was declared the victor . . by only 165 votes.

Tradition calls for a Democratic Governor in Maryland . . and only twice since the Civil War has tradition been broken . . in 1895 and 1911. Will history repeat itself this year?

Mae West and Ben Bernie Are Stars of New Week's Screen and Stage Programs

Revives Odd Old Customs; Bernie Fox Stage Hit; Other Offerings.

By Nelson B. Bell.

"BELLE OF THE NINETIES," Paramount picturization of a screen play by Mae West, starring the author, with Roger Pryor, Johnny Mack Brown, John Miljan, Katherine De Mille, Warren Hymer, Stuart Holmes, Tyler Brooke and many others. Directed by Leo McCarey. Reviewed from preview screening.

What concessions the prodigious Miss Mae West has made to the censors in this subject have not appreciably marred the full effect of her superb affrontery.

The character she portrays—Ruby Carter, whose outlook upon life is colored by the carmined tints of her pigeon-blood first name—is a "sporting lady," encountered first as the equivalent of the present-day "display artiste" in a burlesque show, and later as the stellar personality of Ace Lamont's "Sensation House," the most notorious gambling resort in New Orleans. Her infatuations are with the rough-and-ready gentlemen of the roulette wheels and the prize rings and the particular object of her most enduring passion, the Tiger Kid, on his way to the championship, via a few thefts, a little double crossing, a dose of knockout drops and a final touch of arson and murder. A nice girl, Ruby, and nice boys she played around with!

A Typical Mae West Role.

But that is the story and that is the typical Mae West part, tinging the whole thing with a daring innuendo that contrives to stay rather well within the limits of a loose propriety while giving every appearance of being unalloyed deviltry, hell-bent for brimstone and the demnition bow-wows.

Tawdry as Miss West's dramatic devices are, they are revealed against a background that brings the much maligned decade of the '90s into bold and authentic relief—just as was done in "The Bowery," for example. There is good fun in the lusty burlesque of the era of bowler hats, horseshoe stickpins, parlor lamps, marceled bartenders and low-necked hacks.

Of what ethical value Miss West's flamboyant charades may, or may not, be is a question, but they are, at least, blunt and honest in their defiance of the conventions and reflect accurately the seamier side of life in a period that may not have been as mauve as it has been painted. You either like them or you dont. The crowds storming the Earle seem the best answer to that.

Well-Chosen Cast.

Mae West's Ruby Carter is the familiar Mae West known to audiences from "She Done Him Wrong" and "I'm No Angel"—the undulating hip-slinging, word-biting blonde, intent solely on the conquest of men. No one can do this sort of thing with quite the aplomb, the eclat, the elan that Miss West brings to it.

The supporting cast with which she has surrounded herself was selected with extraordinary judgment. Roger Pryor does a perfect piece of work as the Tiger Kid and Johnny Mack Brown, John Miljan, Katherine De Mille and others of prominence are not far behind.

There is a Negro spiritual sequence, during which the star counterpoints a solo number, that deserves to be thrown upon the full stage, magnascope screen, it is that moving and unusual.

Harmonica Wizard Scores.

The stage bill is distinguished by the performance of a sheer genius on the harmonica. Larry Adler, single-handed, achieves almost the effect of Borah Minnevich's entire band of Harmonica Rascals in Duke Ellington's "Sophisticated Lady," Ravel's rhythmic "Bolero" and "Smoke Gets in Your Eyes," the sentimental gem from Max Gordon's "Roberta." He comes back later to play an equally effective obbligato for the tenor stooge of Bert Walton.

Walton, the ostensible headliner, scores with his smug banter, and Audrey Sieber, resplendent in green and autumn brown, also introduces Herbert, Lynn and Perle in an aerial innovation; "The Sky's the Limit," and a dance novelty, "Living Jewels," featuring Betty Adair and Dick Richards, with Helen Ware, Charles Barnes and a group of posing models.

Universal News and Freddie Clark's overture of "Melodies of the '90's," with Bert Granoff singing the vocal passages, complete a provocative program.

Loew's Fox

"CHARLIE CHAN IN LONDON," Fox picturization of a story by Phillip MacDonald based on the Earl Derr Biggers "Charlie Chan" series, starring Warner Oland, with Drue Leyton, Mona Barrie, Raymond Milland and David Torrence. Directed by Eugene Ford. Reviewed Friday morning by Isabel Harraman Mangum.

America's favorite ole Maestro shares program honors with one of America's favorite cinema sleuths at Loew's Fox this week and the cash customers seem more than satisfied with the result.

No supplementary divertissement, in the form of additional acts of vaudeville, is needed when Maestro Bernie and all the lads, a big black cigar and a casual violin step in front of the footlights. Maestro Bernie is an entrepreneur, Maestro Bernie is also a farceur, a poseur, an arrant and dilettante impresario. In short, Maestro Bernie, is, to use his own expression, the nuts!

Plays Popular Numbers.

Beginning with "Pardon my Southern accent" and continuing through a program of the most popular of his radio numbers, interspersed with cracks at Winchell, sophisticated extemporizings and a truly beautiful violin solo of "Just a Song at Twilight," which gives a glimpse of another side of the versatile Ben Bernie, the Maestro and all his lads sign off with the familiar "Au revoir, pleasant dreams" theme song that has characterized the conclusion of his broadcasts for so many years.

Among the "lads" are included "Col." Manny Prager, veteran Bernie performer; Frank Prince and Billy Wilgus, crooners; Dick Stabile, saxophonist; Purv Pullen, who furnishes the atmosphere in the popular "Let's All Sing Like the Birdies Sing" number, and Billy Sevrin, acrobatic dancer.

Charlie Chan's Latest.

On the screen, that Scandinavian exponent of Oriental roles, Warner Oland, gives another flawless characterization of the artlessly subtle Charlie Chan.

"Charlie Chan in London" is the new adventure of the Chinese detective and it takes Charlie to an English country house with a brief 64 hours to discover who actually committed the murder for which an innocent boy is about to be hanged.

There is a house party in progress and practically any one of the guests is a potential suspect. Another murder is committed and two attempted murders prove that Charlie is coming much too close to the truth for his own good. It is all very exciting and much more logical than film mysteries usually turn out to be.

Support and Subsidiaries.

The subsidiary screen fare includes a Fox Movietone News and a Sport Short entitled "Strikes and Spares," with explanatory remarks by Pete Smith.

Phil Lampkin presents brief selections from "Pagliacci" as an overture and a new member of his orchestra, whose name we did not catch does some splendid vocal numbers.

Columbia

"SHE WAS A LADY," Fox picturization of a novel by Elisabeth Cobb, featuring Helen Twelvetrees, Donald Woods, Ralph Morgan and Monroe Owsley. Directed by Hamilton MacFadden. Reviewed Friday afternoon by W. A. Whitney.

Just what "She Was a Lady" was intended to be, or to prove, is not plain. While the picture, for the most part, is entertaining, its action could have been speeded up and the rough spots evened off with profit. There is a moral plainly evident in the tale, but just what the wording would be is none too certain.

The picture, however, is diverting, with locales of Montana, England, shipboard and New York; with a "father, dear father, come home with me now" scene, scenes of pioneer ruggedness and English permanence, and many opposing temperaments.

Apparently, "She Was a Lady" started out to prove that marriage outside one's social position would lead to misfortune, but as things developed the girl fell in love with Tommy Traill. Now, the girl, Shelia Vane, was poor and, so far as the ancestral moneys were concerned, an outcast because her father had married his mother's maid. And Tommy Traill was the son of what in real life would be the United Fruit Co.

Thus the dilemma was faced: should the original thesis be dropped or should the lovers be united, disregarding the major premise?

Mr. Morgan Tops Cast.

Holding the main interest in the drama are Helen Twelvetrees and Donald Woods, neither particularly distinguished in the assigned role.

Head and shoulders above them (as well as above the other members of the company, including Paul Hervey, Doris Lloyd, Irving Pichel, Jackie Searle, Karol Kay, Ann Howard, Monroe Owsley and Kitty Kelly), is Ralph Morgan, seen as Miss Twelvetrees' father.

One of the most excruciating comedies of many, many weeks is "Speaking of Relations," with Irvin S. Cobb. The lines are enough to turn you double, and the pantomime has you holding your sides to keep from splitting. "Nature's Gangsters" depicts in time-lapse photography the life story of the dodder, a parasitic plant. The Paramount News rounds out a bill that is made by the short subjects.

Palace

"THE BARRETTS OF WIMPOLE STREET," Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picturization of the play by Rudolf Besier, adapted to the screen by Ernest Vajda and Claudine West, starring Norma Shearer, with Fredric March, Charles Laughton, Maureen O'Sullivan, Una O'Connor, Ralph Forbes, Katherine Alexander, Ferdinand Munier and "Flush." Directed by Sidney Franklin.

So faithful a transcription to the screen of one of the most sensationally successful stage plays of the decade that, when the time comes, it must inevitably find a place among the "ten best pictures of the year," "The Barretts of Wimpole Street" continues to engross capacity audiences through a second week at Loew's Palace.

The romantic love story of the invalid Elizabeth Barrett and the dashing and vibrant young poet, Robert Browning, furnishes a substantial basis for drama of the most engaging and most literate sort. Tinctured with the acid temper and tempestuous temperament of a hypocritically sanctimonious father and the spirited revolt of a rebellious younger daughter, it presents stirring climaxes to match the gentler passages of its lilting tale of an idyllic wooing.

Norma Shearer, Frederic March and Charles Laughton offer the most impressive characterizations they have brought to the screen in the roles of primary importance. With such artists as Maureen O'Sullivan, Una O'Connor, Ralph Forbes and numerous others in support, the cast becomes a thing almost of perfection.

A Mickey Mouse cartoon comedy and Metrotone News supplement a feature that should be on everybody's "must" list. N. B. B.

Metropolitan

"DAMES," Warner Bros. picturization of a screen play by Delmer Daves, featuring Dick Powell, Ruby Keeler, Joan Blondell, Hugh Herbert, Zasu Pitts and Guy Kibbee. Directed by Ray Enright. Return engagement.

Those who enjoyed the odd combination of pictorial spectacle, back-stage musical comedy and farcical eccentricity presented by this feathery frolic during its recent successful engagement at the Earle will find opportunity to renew their enthusiasm at the Metropolitan this week, where "Dames" is continuing its downtown career as chief feature of the all-film bill. Those who have not as yet encountered the unique qualities which "Dames" has to offer will find the experience diverting.

There wasn't much that could be done with the backstage idea that had not already found its way to the screen, so emphasis was laid on Dick Powell's voice, Busby Berkeley's uncanny facility in devising devastating overhead camera shots and the pulchritude of the numerous young women who served as subjects for the wizardry of his cameras. The result is a peculiar hybrid that one either likes or doesn't. There seems to be no middle ground.

Personally we like it. Mr. Berkeley's photographic tricks we found exceedingly complex and beautiful; Mr. Powell's songs are fine especially "I Only Have Eyes for You" and "Dames"—and the comedy we could stand, even if it was cheap and dragged in by the heels a good deal of the time. Probably you will feel the same way about it.

RKO-Keith's

"THE COUNT OF MONTE CRISTO," United Artists release of the Reliance picturization of Alexandre Dumas' story, co-featuring Robert Donat and Elissa Landi, with Louis Calhern, Sidney Blackmer, Raymond Walburn and O. P. Heggie. Directed by Rowland V. Lee. Reviewed (third week) by W. A. Whitney.

Edmund Dantes, alias the Count of Monte Cristo, remains in town for another week. Here, indeed, is a delineation which will long be remembered, and a picture in its entirety which leaves nothing to be desired in the way of entertainment.

Nothing new can now be added to what has already been said. It is one of the season's thrills.

Robert Donat and the others mentioned in the italicized paragraph above are splendid, and each in his own moment turns in a performance that is outstanding.

Donald Woods, former leading man of the National Theater Players, pictured above at left, has the leading male role opposite Helen Twelvetrees, in "She Was a Lady," the current film feature at Loew's Columbia. At right is that astute deductionist, Charlie Chan, in the person of Warner Oland, as he appears in "Charlie Chan in London," the screen feature now on view at Loew's Fox, where Ben Bernie occupies the stage.

BLACKIE BEAR

By D. SAM COX

The Old Bird Is Mighty Welcome

If there hadn't been so terribly much going on down on the Creek, Jay Bird would have been back at Mountain House long before now, for, besides being just so nervous that he can't even sit still or stay long in one place, he really wanted to see the cubbies. They had a lot of fun in them, and could take a joke as well as anybody, and Jay Bird always missed them when he was away long. In fact, he left Blackie's cake-cider party last night before any of the others did because he wanted to get up early to start for Mountain House.

He traveled all day without stopping except to rest his wings a few minutes once in a while, and without either breakfast or dinner, for he knew that Bettie would be glad to fix him a good lunch, no matter when he came in. But the truth is that he ate so much supper at Blackie's house the night before that he wasn't very hungry when he arrived, and so he told Bettie that he would wait till supper.

"I certainly am glad to see you," Bettie said. "Tell us about everybody and everything."

"I could tell you a bit about everybody, but I couldn't possibly tell you even half of everything in a whole day," Jay Bird said, "but I can tell you that you just don't know what you have missed. Never in your life have you seen such cutting up and carrying on as we have had on the creek for the past week. It has just about worn me out, and I am going to have to rest for a few days. You won't have to be after me about being nervous, for I am going to find a good fork up in that old sycamore tree, and wedge myself up there in the sun and just rest and sleep. Every one of Blackie's friends needs a rest, for I tell you they have been a busy bunch, for a week or two." And then he told them about some of the frolics they had been having.

"What did Daddy get from Uncle Joe's in the daytime?" Benny asked.

"He got two big buckets of cider, and he came mighty near drinking all of one of them for supper last night. He said it was the best cider he ever saw. But he didn't drink so much but what he left was plenty for the rest of us. If there hadn't been enough to go around, he would have filled everybody else's cup, and left his own empty. That's the sort of daddy you have. And I almost hate to tell your mother that Mrs. Man can make ginger cake that is almost half as good as the corn cakes that I eat when I come up here. Mrs. Man is certainly a good cook, and she seems to like to cook for Blackie. Anyway, she does a lot of cooking for him."

"I'm afraid Mrs. Man is going to spoil that fellow," Bettie said. "When he comes back I shall expect him to be telling me what good things his 'low country' cook makes for him, and if he does—well just let him."

"Don't you let that worry you, Mrs. Blackie," Jay Bird said. "If you could hear him telling folks about the sort of housekeeper he has up at Lake Bettie and how she can cook the best corn cakes and rabbit stew in the world, you wouldn't think he had been spoiled. Some nights after supper, when he is smoking his pipe, he will begin talking about Bettie this and Bettie that, for ever so long, and then he will sit right still for a while and blow smoke rings.

"After a while he will get up and go off to bed, and without even saying goodnight to anybody. I am sure those are the times when he wants to see his Bettie. Would you say that such a fellow has been spoiled?"

For answer, Bettie grabbed her handkerchief and went off to bed without saying goodnight, even as Blackie had done.

Stocks Decline Eight-tenths; Volume Lags

Market Slips Into Quiet Decline as Sales Fall to 512,200 Shares.

New York, Sept. 28 (AP).—Unable to make further headway on the recent advance, stocks slipped into a quiet decline in late trading today.

Movements of the preceding session were reversed as nonferrous metal shares, led by United States Smelting & Refining, rallied while most other groups yielded part of their gains scored earlier in the week.

Reactionary tendencies held sway in most markets, although trading was quiet and movements generally narrow, while the financial district waited for President Roosevelt's "Fireside Talk" Sunday night.

Desire to Cash in.

Brokers attributed the easier tone of stocks, as well as bonds, to a desire by traders to cash in part of their profits at the week-end following the recovery from the mid-September low points.

Profit taking started early after Wall street had digested the overnight news, including the Federal Reserve's margin rules, and broadened out toward the finish. Turnover, however, dropped to 512,200 shares, compared with 796,570 yesterday. The Standard Statistics Co. average for 90 selected stocks dipped 8-10 of a point to 72.1.

The margin rules made a favorable impression, judging by comment from brokerage quarters, but the market evidently had anticipated them. They were not expected to cause liquidation of undermargined accounts when they become effective October 1.

Except for reports of expanding retail demand for goods this month, Wall street found little in the day's news to brighten the nearby business outlook.

Retraced Most of Space.

U. S. Smelting & Refining retraced most of the ground lost in the previous session, finishing 3 points higher. Cerro de Pasco, Alaska Juneau and McIntyre Porcupine rallied for gains of fractions to more than a point. Brokers pointed out that silver had been trending upward in the world market but had no clear-cut explanation for the turnabout in metals.

Celanese was a firm spot in active trading, reflecting improvement in sentiment toward textile shares this week. Otherwise, traders found the action mainly on the selling side. Chrysler, National Biscuit, U. S. Steel, Santa Fe, Allied Chemical, International Harvester, J. I. Case, U. S. Industrial Alcohol and Hercules Powder retreated for losses of 1 to about 2 points.

American Telephone was a selling mark on the cut in the dividend of Bell Telephone of Pennsylvania to $1.50 quarterly on its common compared with $2 paid previously. The big company's shares closed 1⅝ lower at 111.

Retrenchment in Relief Outlays Is Asked to Cut Federal Deficit

Momentous Question Faces Administration Whether to Reduce or Expand Emergency Spending; Many Solutions Are Named; Political Obstacles Arise.

By Anna P. Youngman.

One of the most momentous questions that confronts the Administration is whether to reduce or expand the scale of emergency spending, especially outlays of the FERA and the PWA. The budgetary deficit for the current fiscal year to date, which already exceeds $500,000,000, is more than accounted for by these two agencies.

Consequently the question of how to bring the budget into balance becomes largely a question of how to cut relief expenditures. Some people argue that immediate retrenchment would be an aid to recovery while others maintain that a reduction in spending, especially for relief purposes, is impossible and unthinkable until recovery has been achieved.

Despite the political obstacles in the way of a contraction of the spending program, the economic arguments in its favor are very compelling. Emergency relief outlays are responsible for the Federal deficit. The Federal deficit in turn creates fears that the Government may eventually be forced to resort to inflation as a means of financing its uncovered outlays. As a result, business men and investors hestitate to enter into long-time commitments.

Begin to Doubt.

Even business men who are concerned about the stagnation of private building construction have begun to doubt the advisability of continuing to carry on the public works emergency program. The PWA has provided work for relatively few of the millions of idle and the public works program has not had the stimulative effect that had been hoped for.

On the contrary, private construction remains at very low ebb and the problem of reviving the heavy industries is as acute as ever.

Wallace B. Donham, dean of the Harvard School of Business Administration, recently issued a warning against public spending that is especially impressive in view of his manifest sympathy with plans for giving work rather than charity to the unemployed. "The Government's ability to continue work relief," he said, "depends on the attitude it takes toward managers of business. Unless business starts up, Government credit must crack under the cost which is twice the cost of subsistence relief * * * In my view of things, unless the Government plans quick action to relieve uncertainties and give managers courage, relief should at once be placed on a straight subsistence basis. Even then," he added, "the credit outlook is bad." In that concluding sentence Dean Donham referred to the dominant fear that explains the growing anxiety concerning the country's future.

Fears Still Exist.

The fears once entertained that the Government would resort to inflation as a deliberate act of policy still exist, but they have been reinforced by fears that the spending program will eventually force resort to greenbacks or lead to revolutionary changes in the banking system which would give the Government complete control over credit operations. Rumors of this sort are given credence because of the growing realization of the strain that present methods of deficit financing place upon the Government's credit.

The most solemn official assurances of fidelity to sound money principles and promises to avoid further monetary experimentation will not allay anxiety if Federal deficits are not brought under control, for the simple reason that chronic deficits and a sound monetary system can not exist side by side.

It is beginning to be realized, too, that even if restrictions upon new capital issues were removed, uncertainties created by unsound fiscal policies would prevent an investment revival. Investors have to be encouraged not only by fair words and reasonable regulations, but by positive action to preserve the Government credit through reductions in expenditures and additions to taxes. Moreover, a courageous program of fiscal reform would go far toward removing fears that we are drifting toward State Socialism, because economy in public outlays would check costly experiments in the form of State aid to industry, and emphasize the importance of private profits as a source of taxable revenue.

Bar Silver Advances To 50 Cents per Ounce

New York, Sept. 28 (AP).—Bar silver touched 50 cents an ounce in the New York market today, up ⅜c and the highest price since 1929.

This is the first time the spot market price has touched the level at which speculative and hoarded stocks of metal were nationalized by the Treasury, and evidently reflected further gains in foreign markets.

Further increases in the London market in the past few days are believed here to represent a resumption of foreign buying by the Treasury. The London price rose 1-16 of a penny to 22 7-16 pence an ounce today.

The Dollar Abroad

(Associated Press.)

Foreign currencies moved divergently in terms of dollars yesterday with the pound sterling and allied units gaining and gold currencies extending their declines.

The pound sold at $4.97½ in New York, an overnight rise of ¾ of a cent. The dollar closed in London at 4.97½ to the pound. Sterling also improved against gold units, selling at 74.87 francs, compared with 74.56 yesterday.

The price of gold in London fell 4 pence to 141 shillings, ½ penny a fine ounce (equivalent to $35.02), and bars valued at $1,638,862 were purchased.

French francs dropped .00⅝ of a cent in New York to 6.64⅝ cents. Other gold units acted in a similar fashion. Canadian dollar firmed slightly, rising 1-16 of a cent to 2¾ cents premium over par.

Bonds Display Listlessness In Slow Sales

Trading Smallest Since August 28, Totaling $8,970,000.

New York, Sept. 28 (AP).—Trading in today's bond market was listless and price changes, on the whole, meaningless.

Transfers totaled only $8,970,000, par value, against $72,243,000 yesterday. It was the smallest day's business since August 28. The Standard Statistics Co. average for 60 domestic corporate issues was up one-tenth of a point at 83.7.

United States Government securities were also quiet and inclined to drift lower. The turnover in this department amounted to only about $1,550,000 compared with $4,150,000 in the previous session. The Government-guaranteed Federal Farm and Home Owners Loan bonds were again rather heavy, three of them losing seven-thirty-seconds of a point each.

Elsewhere in the Federal section declines of one-thirty-second to four-thirty-seconds perdominated. Liberty first and fourth 4¼s and Treasury 4¼s managed to hold slight advances.

Some of the rails moved a bit higher despite the contraseasonal drop in freight car loadings for the previous week. Denver & Rio Grande issues were only a trifle easier following the meeting of the board of directors at which no action was taken on the October 1 interest payments. Rio Grande collateral 5s, however, dropped 6½ points to 40½ on a few transactions.

Some South American obligations yielded moderately under profit taking, but Latauro Nitrate 6s were active at an advance of 1¼ points to 13¾. German bonds were irregularly lower.

Curb's Prices Decline Under Profit Taking

Some Metals Resist as Transfers Decline to 120,000 Shares.

New York, Sept. 28 (AP).—Profit taking caused numerous declines of fractions to around a point on the curb exchange today. Trading slowed up on the reaction.

Some of the metals were resistant but utilities, oils, alcohols and specialities were generally lower. Prices were narrow at the opening, but a slightly lower drift soon developed. Offerings increased somewhat in the late afternoon dealings.

Bunker Hill & Sullivan, a recent soft spot among metals, recovered more than a point. Pioneer Gold and Newmont closed fractionally higher. British-American Tobacco was firm, while Distillers Corporation-Seagrams, Lake Shore and Parker Rust Proof ruled rather steady.

American Gas & Electric, Sherwin Williams and Hiram Walker yielded about a point each. Lesser declines appeared in American Cyanamid B, Aluminum Co. of America, International Petroleum, Electric Bond & Share, Pittsburgh Plate Glass, Swift & Co., Swift International and Creole Petroleum.

Wool Markets.

Boston, Sept. 28 (A.P.).—(U. S. Department of Agriculture.)—Bids on fair weights of greasy combing territory wools were being made more frequently than for many weeks. Few sales were being closed, however, as bids were mostly under asking prices. Several houses received offers in the range 65@66 cents scoured basis on original bag good French combing 64s and finer territory wools, which were being held at 70@72 cents scoured basis. Clothing 58s ⅜ blood territory wool sold at 60@63 cents scoured basis.

London, Sept. 28 (AP).—At the wool auction today 8,272 bales were offered, of which 7,490 were sold. The week's market closed with a good tone. Withdrawals were limited and mostly of scoured kinds. Chief support came from the home trade, although continental business was quite extensive.

Foreign Markets.

(Associated Press.)

London—A firmer trend prevailed on the stock exchange yesterday, with the feature of the market being the firmness in home rails and coal shares following the Welsh coal agreement. Gilt-edged securities advanced fractionally, while Japanese and Brazilian issues weakened and Germans and West African gold-mining shares held steady. Transatlantic issues were firmer, but under their best for the day, while home industrials and Kaffirs also improved. Oil stocks were cheerful on dividend anticipaton. The market closed firmer.

Paris—Prices on the bourse held steady in a quiet session, when gold-mining shares led in slight gains. The closing was firm.

Gossip of New York Markets

By Claude A. Jagger.

New York, Sept. 28 (AP).—During the recent extreme stagnation of trading in the stock exchange, some market experts have paused to wonder if it might not become necessary for Wall street to adopt some of the styles of Throgmorton street.

The essential difference between maintains a market for some 10,000 issues with a modest amount of trading, while the New York exchange, with less than 2,800 issues, has had difficulty in bringing together buyers and sellers lately.

Bhe essential difference between the two markets is that in each issue in London, there is a jobber, who buys and sells for his own account, who is always ready to trade, while in New York, although there is a specialist in each issue, his job is primarily to match orders of buyers and sellers.

Thus, while the London exchange provides an actual dealer in each issue, the New York exchange is designed essentially merely to bring together buying and selling orders.

The New York style of market, therefore, demands a large volume of trading to keep it running smoothly. In such dull markets as have recently been experienced, there are often no bids for a stock over a considerable period of time, or bids and offers are so far apart that they can not be brought together.

The dangers of an extremely thin market, that is, a market in which bids and offers are few and often far apart, are obvious. Any sudden flurry of selling may at any time send the market severely lower. When shares are offered in large volume, and buyers virtually can not be found, a market panic develops. Now the New York market is not believed to be faced with any such eventuality, but the precipitous decline of July 26 was hair-raising, and was attributed in good part to the thinness of the market at that time.

The London system has been developed by long tradition, and market experts doubt that it could be suddenly transplanted to this country. But it does provide a ready market for a large number of issues of small companies in which trading is in relatively small volume. Of course, it also has its own particular kinds of abuses.

Reading Co. Votes Dividend Of 50 Cents

Mid-Continent Petroleum Declares Regular Return of 25 Cents.

New York, Sept. 28 (AP).—Directors of the Reading Co. have declared the regular quarterly dividend of 50 cents a share on the common stock of the company, payable November 8 to stock of record October 11.

Directors of the Mid-Continent Petroleum Corporation have declared the regular quarterly dividend of 25 cents a share on the capital stock, payable November 15 to stock of record October 15.

Anaconda Copper Mining Co. reports for the 6 months ended June 30 net income of $2,986,497 after interest, Federal taxes, depreciation and minority interest, but before depletion. A comparison with the same period last year was not made available.

Directors of the Briggs Manufacturing Co. of Detroit today declared the regular quarterly dividend of 25 cents a share on the common stock, and an extra dividend of 25 cents, both payable October 30 to stock of record October 16.

W. D. Robinson was elected a director to fill the vacancy created by the death of James Q. Goudie.

Beatrice Creamery Co. and subsidiaries report for the six months ended August 31 net income of $713,605, equivalent after dividend requirements on the preferred stock to 90 cents a share on the common stock, against $485,849, or 27 cents a share on the common for the six months ended August 31, 1933.

A sharp decline registered by large Eastern carriers in earnings for August, as compared with a year ago, caused the aggregate showing of the first 58 roads to report to make an unfavorable comparison.

Revenues of the first 30 carriers ran about even with a year ago, but reductions registered by such roads as the Pennsylvania, New York Central and Baltimore & Ohio offset such favorable reports as were returned by Western roads, including Union Pacific, Santa Fe and Southern Pacific.

Net operating income of the first 58 roads to report for August amounted to $34,037,000, compared with $50,290,000 in the same month last year, and $25,589,000 in August, 1932. In July, this year, net operating income of these roads totaled $30,213,000, a drop of 44 per cent below the $54,020,000 registered in the comparable month of 1933.

Gross revenues of these carriers totaled $242,970,000. in August, against $253,296,000 in the same month last year, a decrease of 4.1 per cent, and $216,999,000 in August, 1932, an increase of 12 per cent. In July their gross was $231,846,000, a decrease of 5 per cent below the $251,159,000 reported for the same month last year.

The Northampton Brewery Corporation of Pennsylvania yesterday announced that the board of directors had declared the initial quarterly dividend of 5 cents a share on its $2 par value convertible preferred stock. The dividend will be payable October 25, 1934 to stockholders of record on October 15, 1934.

Wheat Values Pushed Lower By Shipments

Receipts From Southern Hemisphere Helps in Market's Drop.

Chicago, Sept. 28 (AP).—Influenced by enlarged shipments of wheat from the southern hemisphere and by weakness of the Argentine wheat market, all grains averaged lower in price today.

A disposition to be cautious pending tomorrow's windup of September delivery contracts was shown by most traders.

Uncertainty as to the contents of President Roosevelt's speech Sunday night was also a restraining factor, and tended to keep price changes to within narrow limits. Rye, however, touched a new bottom price record for the season.

Wheat Closes Easy.

Wheat closed easy at the same as yesterday's finish to ⅜ lower; December, new, 1.03⅜@1.03¾; corn, ⅜ off to ¼ up; December, new, 78⅜@78½; oats at ⅜ decline to ¾ advance, and provisions unchanged to a setback of 10 cents.

At no time did wheat prices here score any gain today, and at some stages went down nearly a cent. No particular pressure to sell was in evidence, but during much of the time the purchase side of the futures market displayed indifference.

Many traders were still hoping for some buying stimulus from President Roosevelt's Sunday talk, though seemingly unimpressed regarding overnight developments at Washington.

Rallies in wheat prices, such as they were, appeared to be due more or less to advances in cash wheat premiums Southwest, and to improved milling demand there.

The domestic primary movement of wheat was meager, with indications of continued smallness of receipts. On the other hand, pronounced weakness of the rye market here served as a drag on all grain values here.

Liquidation of rye futures was ascribed to uneasiness regarding likelihood of enlarged imports of rye into the United States. Holders of rye futures were especially disturbed by talk of an influx of Polish rye.

Corn and oats followed wheat setbacks early, but tightened up later on buying for Northwest account.

Provisions were responsive to hog market downturns.

Life And Letters.

The big man dies, much like his betters, and some one prints his "Life and Letters." His life is sometimes quite uplifting, with golden actions through it drifting, with evidence of high endeavors, with thoughts profound and statements clever. But when we try to read his letters we are disposed to rend our sweaters. The man who was ordained to edit has done the dead one little credit. Rejecting Boswell's standard model, he lets in every kind of twaddle; the vain and gossipy epistles concerning tripe and penny whistles, the running comments on the weather, the style in hats, the price of leather, the gossip of the busy neighbors, about their pastimes and their labors—of everything that hints of piffle, the editor has made the riffle. Oh, such a book makes weary reading, and leaves our bosoms sore and bleeding, upon an eminence commanding, when he was here on earth among us, before his letters came and stung us. He seemed to walk the higher places, of tawdry thoughts there were no traces, his dignity was fine, unbroken, in every sentence he had spoken there was the ring of solid reason, to doubt his eminence was treason. "His mind," we thought, "is always soaring, new light on heavy problems pouring." Then he shakes off his mortal fetters, and some one prints his Life and Letters, and when the weary book is finished our admiration is diminished. "Another idol gone to thunder," we murmur then; in grief and wonder.

Store Is Ready For Dedication Of Escalators

Jesse Jones to Officiate at Hecht Co. Ceremony Set for Tonight.

Distinguished guests will be introduced tonight by one of Washington's leading radio announcers as the Hecht Co., F and Seventh streets northwest, opens is escalator system, one of the most elaborate in the country.

No merchandise will be sold in the big department store as the official dedication of the modernized system to facilitate shopping takes place.

Jesse H. Jones, chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, will make the dedicatory speech and snip the ribbon opening the escalators to public service. The doors will be opened at 7:45 p. m., and the program will be broadcast over WRC from 8 to 8:30 p. m.

Employes to Be Guides.

Guests will be welcomed by a reception committee composed of high ranking officials of the store and employes in evening clothes who will serve as guides throughout the evening.

More than 3,000 special invitations have been sent to Cabinet officers, the Diplomatic Corps, Senators and Representatives, members of the judiciary, high ranking Army and Navy officers and other prominent Washingtonians.

The reception committee includes Harold H. Levi, Charles B. Dulcan, sr., James Rotto, George Quirk, Charles L. Marlow, J. Willard Nalls, Harry Davidlow, H. J. Grinsfelder, J. S. Styles, Herman Meyer, Mrs. Margaret Schutz, Miss Frances Goodacre, Miss Eloise Carpenter, Miss Dorothy Faulkner and A. M. Schleisner.

Sidney's Mayflower Orchestra will furnish the music. Pietro Giantellia, New York opera star, will lead a picked chorus of Hecht Co. employes in singing "The Star-Spangled Banner."

Jones to Take First Ride.

Mr. Jones will be introduced by Alexander Hecht, and later will take the first ride on the escalators.

With the dedication of the escalators completed, the store will be opened to the public. Thousands of dollars' worth of flowers have been ordered. Oldest employes, who have witnessed the growth and development of Hecht's, will follow Mr. Jones on the escalators.

The new escalators are among the first installed by the Otis Elevator Co., and are similar to those for which Radio City has contracted in New York.

Treated in modern design to harmonize with the store's surroundings, the installation cost approximately $125,000, which is part of the more than $250,000 spent by the Hecht Co. in the last few months in modernizing the store.

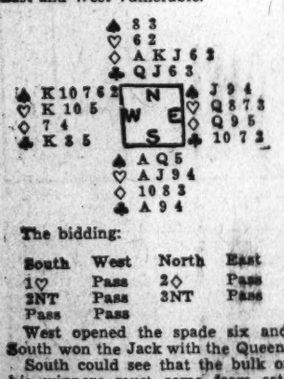
Taking the Danger Out of the "Danger Hand."

One of the first things the Declarer should try to decide is which adversary holds the "danger hand" and how this adversary may be prevented from gaining the lead after establishing the setting tricks. One of the methods commonly used is to hold up a controlling card in this adversary's long suit until his partner has no card of that suit with which to put him in the lead. Another is to put the danger hand in the lead, and thus deprive him of an entry card, at a time when the lead can do him no good. Both methods are illustrated in the following hand:

South, Dealer.
East and West vulnerable.



The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1♡	Pass	2◇	Pass
2NT	Pass	3NT	Pass
Pass	Pass

West opened the spade six and South won the Jack with the Queen.

South could see that the bulk of his winners must come from setting up the diamond suit, but as this might require losing the lead in diamonds, he had to prepare to shut out the adverse spade suit. He could, of course, withhold the spade Ace until the third round of the suit, but this course would be futile if West had a side re-entry. If the diamond suit would produce five tricks, no clubs would be necessary except the Ace. But if the diamond suit would produce only four tricks, an additional club trick would be necessary.

South did not fear a heart entry in West's hand, since he himself had command of the suit, but the possible club entry was to be feared because it stood in the way of a second club trick.

His course was thus indicated. He led a diamond to the Ace in Dummy and then led the Queen of clubs for a finesse. If the finesse won, he was sure of his two club tricks without loss of the lead, and he could then turn his attention to suit. If the finesse lost, then at least the dangerous club King had been knocked out of the West hand before South's spade Ace could be forced out.

After winning the club King, West continued spades; but South held up his Ace, and when later the diamond finesse lost to East, and East returned a heart (having no spade left), South put up the Ace of hearts and ran his tricks. The clubs breaking, South made four notrump.
